Freezer Research To Bring Savings
OREGON STATE COLLEGE—Engineering research findings that will bring marked improvements in efficiency of commercial food freezers have been reported by Oregon State college.
Significant savings in power and in time required to freeze foods will be possible as a result of recommended changes in arrangement of the cold air blowers and product loading methods. Findings will also help improve frozen food products because keeping quality, looks and texture of frozen foods are all effected by length of freezing time.
Changes recommended can be adapted to existing air blast type freezers.
The project was started 2 1/2 years ago under a $17,600 grant from the western utilization branch of the US department of agriculture research service. George Thornburgh, assistant professor of mechanical engineering, was project leader.
One of the engineering problems that prompted the study was the uneven distribution of cold air currents through freezers. Thornburgh explained. This produced variations in freezing times of packaged foods inside the freezer and some variations in frozen food quality.
As an aid in overcoming the problem, the OSC engineers built a full-scale commercial freezer with flexible design that permitted changes in location of freezing units and blowers and provided comparisons of airflow patterns.
Variation in air distribution was greatly reduced by changing the arrangement of the blowers and by designing loading frames that place the foods being processed in a simulated "tunnel" rather than a stack as before. The tunnel permits better circulation and penetration of the cold air and gives more uniform freezing.
With the changes, it was found that power savings of some 80 percent could be realized at the blowers and that quantity of air being moved could be reduced

IN THE SADDLE . . . With The Wranglers
By JOHN NEWMAN
Say . . . we have a fair booth coming up. Mrs Mankin is in charge and while she is very capable, let's let her know we are willing to help in any way she can use us. Get the club spirit—that makes for success. She is as close as your telephone. It is such a little effort on your part but will mean a lot to her. Now would be a good time to call—don't let her carry the ball with no support till the last week, that isn't teamwork. I know you will all help if she calls on you, but give her that assurance now. Thanks!

by 60 percent compared to some commercial freezers. Savings in time required to freeze the food an increase in the freezing capacity of the freezer, Thornburgh pointed out.
Mrs Velma Glass and son Tom returned Friday from a three weeks vacation trip to Indiana where they visited relatives.
