Area Dairy Products Going Into New Carnation Plant

The manufacture of nonfat dry milk powder and butter began recently at Carnation Company's Central Washington and North-east Oregon dairy plant, Jim Hager, Carnation's fresh dairy products distributor in this area announced this week.

"The company has made this new $100,000 addition to its plant in Sunnyside, Washington," Hager said, "in the search for new markets for the surplus milk of Carnation's producers in North-east Oregon, Southeast and Central Washington." Carnation purchases last year from 275 dairy farmers in its area amounted to $1,734,550.91.

Hager said the new operation enables his company to find markets in the United States and abroad for the surplus milk Carnation presently takes from the area. It will help the company's dairy farmer shippers keep a market for all their milk, he said, as the area does not now consume all its products.

Mr Hager said, "In the area that Hager's Dairy services, we paid $125,948.20 for raw milk in the past year. Our payroll during this same time was $10,994.76. Our policy has been and will continue to be to sell all of the production from our area that we can find market for, first covering our own sales and then all of the surplus market that we can get for Eastern Oregon producers. We believe the new grade A powdered milk plant of Carnation will be a new outlet for producers in our area."
