New Definition of "Farm" Told by ASC

A new definition of a farm, which is uniform throughout the country for purposes of the acreage allotment and Soil Bank programs, takes effect this year, according to Mr J E McBurney of the Oregon State Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee. The new definition places emphasis on farm operation. In general a farm is defined as: (1) All adjoining or nearby and easily accessible farm, wood, or range land under the same ownership which is operated by the same person; and (2) All additional farm, wood, or range land under different ownership which is operated by that same person provided it is nearby and easily accessible, is approximately equally productive, and has been operated as part of the farm for the past two years or will be so operated for two years in the future. Under this definition, the operator of a farm means the person who is in charge of the supervision and conduct of the farming operations. To be considered easily accessible and nearby, tracts of land should be close enough together so that farm labor is or could be freely interchanged and machinery could be moved between them under its own power during farming operations. Tracts under different ownerships will not be combined, Mr McBurney said where one is primarily irrigated land and the other is primarily non-irrigated or where the tracts differ so widely in productivity that crop allotments likely would be shifted from one tract to the other. Any land which was properly identified as a "farm" under previous definitions will continue to be classed as a farm until a change in operating arrangements occur. If a change is necessary, the new definition will be used in all cases. Farmers or others interested in farm real estate who have questions about application of the new farm definition may get detailed information at the county ASC office.

Job Outlook Bright For Ag Graduates, OSC Leaders Report

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—The number of U S farmers may be decreasing every year but the number of people working in agriculture is steadily increasing and the job outlook for this year's graduates in agriculture may be about the brightest in history, according to Oregon State College officials. The number of Americans "down on the farm" is getting smaller because farm operations are getting bigger, and because per acre production is ever climbing. To many, the fact that the number of persons employed on farms has dropped from 13,555,000 in 1913 to 7,525,000 in 1958 is a sign that opportunities in agriculture are dimming. Exactly the reverse is true, says Wilbur Cooney, associate dean of agriculture at OSC. Agriculture is the nation's biggest single industry. It employs 40 percent of the 65 million people who work in the United States today and its customers increase as rapidly as the population of the nation. Behind the 8 million farmers and ranchers today, are some 7 million workers who produce the equipment and supplies for and who service farmers, and another 11 million who process and distribute farm food and fiber products—meat and poultry packing, dairy processing, food processing, textiles and fibers. In addition, a half million scientists directly or indirectly serve agriculture—research in feeds, plant and animal growth, better food products. Recent surveys show that some 15,000 new college graduates with agricultural training are needed each year now for agricultural-type jobs. This year, less than half that number—about 7,000—will graduate from the nation's 60 land-grant colleges, Cooney pointed out. OSC will graduate about 175 students in agriculture this June.
