Beef Feed Research Findings Reported

New findings in beef cattle feeding, including adjustment of rations for animals receiving treatment, have been reported by the Oregon State College agricultural experiment station.

Results are summarized in a bulletin, "Results of 1957-58 Milton-Freewater Beef Feeding Experiments." Oregon residents may obtain free copies from local county extension agents or from the OSC bulletin clerk, Corvallis.

David C. England, OSC scientist, and Norton Taylor, Umatilla county extension agent, conducted the trials in cooperation with Umatilla county beef producers.

More than 20 animals provided by local ranchers were used in the trials. Major findings include adjustment of grain intake as animals gain weight, best protein levels, comparisons of various types of roughages, and experiments with single and multiple hormone implants to stimulate growth.

Local employees of Pacific Power & Light Company have received congratulations from PP&L President, D. R. McClung for achieving a safety-at-work performance during the past year which has won a national Injury Frequency Reduction Award for the company.

The certificate was presented to PP&L by the Edison Electric Institute in recognition of a reduction of 25 percent or greater in the injury frequency among employees as compared with the three previous years.

Injury frequency rates are based on the number of lost time accidents per million man-hours worked, according to Fons J. Hughes, safety director of the power company. Through May 11, local district employees had worked 611,080 man-hours without a lost-time mishap.
