

Over The Tee Cup

By Jackie Labhart

Nineteen women played golf on ladies day. The following struggled around the nine holes, as we all seemed to have trouble:

Arolene Laird, Sue Valentine, Roberta Dougherty, Vi Lanham, Dolores McDowell, Dee Gribble, Bonnie Mattoon, Coramae Ferguson, Velma Glass, Hazel Mahoney, Inez Huffman, Gladys Snider, Maxine Gray, Hester Creswick, Vivian Williams, Lucille Peck, Marie McQuarrie and Louise Clark who was a guest for the day.

Putts were kept track of and subtracted from gross score to see who won the prizes for the day. Vi and Hazel tied for low. Results of the eclectic tournament were given. Vi, Jackie and Dee came out on top. There was a new eclectic board started today to run for two months.

A new tournament to start next Tuesday was discussed. Anyone interested please contact Vi, Hester or Lucille. 50 cents is to be charged for entering. It was decided 25 cents plus penny putts would be put in the kitty each ladies day to help defray expenses instead of the present 10 cents.

Tee off time next Tuesday is 8:45.

OF COURSE, when you buy health protection for your family, you want the best, most complete, most reliable plan your money can buy. Which one will give you the kind of protection you need?

PERHAPS the best possible authority on health protection is your family doctor. He works with many health plans. And, chances are, he is one of the more than 1400 Oregon doctors who actually sponsor a plan specifically designed for Oregon families—Oregon Physicians' Service.

So, ask your doctor. You can rely on his experience and judgment in helping you select the plan that's best for you. And, if he recommends OPS, remember that there's an OPS representative ready to give you full details. Don't wait—you'll be glad you asked!

Jackie Labhart was not here for ladies day so I, Marie McQuarrie am pinch hitting with just straight news. Tune in next week for Jackie's column.

Chats With Your Home Agent

By ESTHER KIRMIS

The following is an article that came out of the Oregon State College news bureau concerning the scope of the home economics program over Oregon as a whole. I think you'll find it's an "eye-opener" of just what extension work in the home economics field has accomplished this past year.

Oregon women want to learn more homemaking skills, want more help on buying, and are taking a greater interest in community improvements, a summary of home economics extension programs by Oregon State College indicates.

Homemaking needs, as expressed by women, are similar in all parts of the state, say extension specialists. Homemakers want to learn to be better purchasing agents for their families in food, furnishings, clothing and equipment. They also want to provide tasty meals, sew some of their own clothes, and make their homes more attractive. Homemakers' interests vary, however, depending on their experience, age and income.

More than 20,000 women were trained last year in homemaking skills as club officers, as 4-H leaders committee chairmen and in program planning.

Last year, through offerings of the cooperative extension service, women requested and received assistance in good nutrition for better health, food preparation, food preservation and in family-centered cooking projects. Outdoor cookery and family entertaining were carried out in both adult and 4-H programs.

Nearly 750 women attended nutrition workshops in Benton, Polk, Wasco, Sherman, Tillamook and Marion counties to learn what foods are needed for good health. Included in the three-day series were lessons on weight control, food facts and fallacies and the importance of good breakfasts.

Mrs Ruth Klippstein, extension nutritionist, also noted a renewed interest in breadbaking. Cookery of Oregon products—wheat, seafoods and unfamiliar foods—was also taught. Meat cookery was a popular lesson in 12 counties.

Lessons in planning, buying, construction, and care of clothing were presented in both youth and adult groups last year through the extension service. Wardrobe planning for all family members included information on individual clothing needs and help in selection, care and use of modern textiles. Buying guides to help families determine how to spend their clothing dollar were offered in lessons in 24 Oregon counties.

County extension agents and OSC specialists trained 832 women in 29 counties in sewing skills. These "voluntary teachers" then trained thousands of other women through organized community groups.

Women's programs also included rural health, medical care, family business and the law, car maintenance and repair, civil defense, and household pest control. Women have asked for more help in group leadership, family relationships and family finance.

Oregon girls, "tomorrow's homemakers" closely follow interests of their mothers with foods and clothing the most popular projects in the extension service sponsored 4-H club program. Most of the 10,966 youngsters enrolled in clothing projects were girls, with 107 boys taking bachelor sewing, says Ruth Brasher, state 4-H club agent. Nearly 9,000 youngsters enrolled in food preparation projects and 1,330 boys took outdoor cookery and other foods projects.

Planning and management of family resources, and family life education are among the objectives of extension education programs in the future, believes Esther Taskerud, coordinator of state home economics programs. Families need to plan for more community services such as health, education, recreation, civil defense, and take steps to see that their communities can provide them, she thinks. More training for Oregon's 5,000 voluntary 4-H leaders will also be emphasized.
