Heavy Incoming Grain Movement at Portland Foreseen

Supplies of grain in Portland terminal elevators have been reduced sharply—which could mean an unusually heavy movement into Portland when the new crop is harvested.

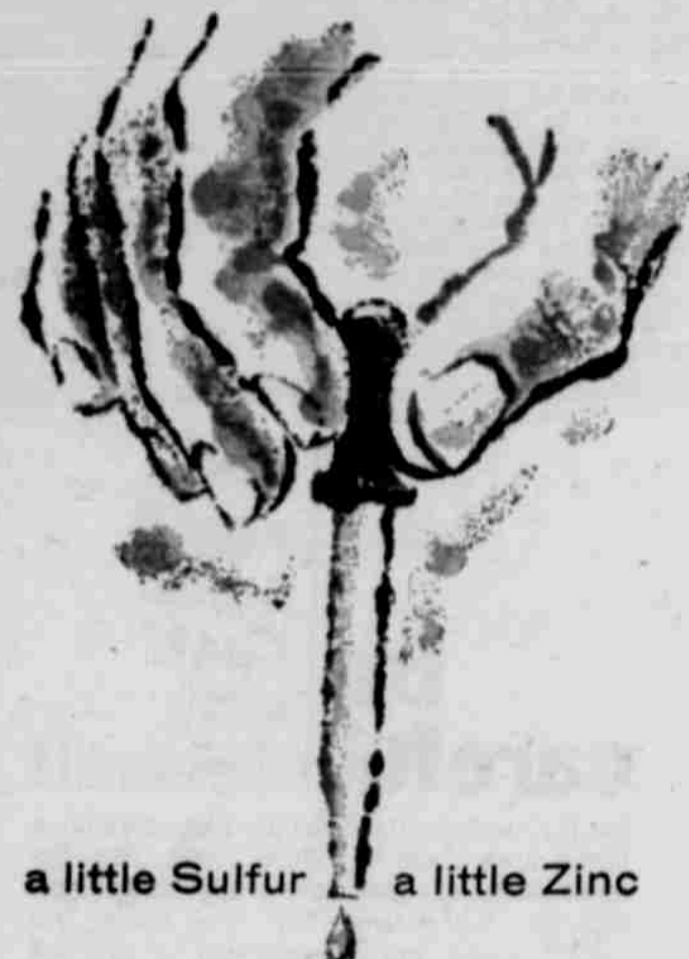

This prediction came from T Ralph Harry, grain division chief of the state department of agriculture. At the same time he reported July grain receipts at Portland continued the decline which started in May.

The July drop in incoming grain to 3.8 million bushels is due, he says, to a slack in export loadings after mid-July, the fire at the Glode dock on July 10 and a hold-back due to the September effective date of lower grain freight rates.

Harry gave this comparison of July grain movement into Portland with recent years: July 1959, 6.5 million bushels; July 1958, 11.2 million; July 1957, 5.4 million.

On the export side, 15 full shiploads moved to foreign countries in July this year. This compares with 12 cargoes the month before and May's 1960 high of 25 cargoes.

The division chief said his men made 127,533 grain inspections in the year ending June 30. He added Oregon weighed and inspected 71.6 million bushels of the 137 million bushels of grain exported from the Columbia river the past fiscal year.

a little Sulfur a little Zinc

CAN MAKE A WHOPPING BIG DIFFERENCE

Both sulfur and zinc have proved to be essential elements for crop growth. They must be available in the soil for other nutrients to be effective. And they are widely deficient in most Western states.

But most important, sizeable increases in yields have been produced when sulfur or zinc has been applied along with nitrogen, and when they have been injected into the root zone.

To be sure you're not missing a chance to improve your profit picture, we can help you set up an accurate test on your own land with BREA BRAND AQUA-Z, a new fertilizer that combines nitrogen and zinc in easy-to-use solution form, or with BREA BRAND AQUA-PLUS-SULFUR, also combined with nitrogen in solution form.

Both can be applied as easily and accurately as Brea Brand Aqua Ammonia.
