Fun With Children Is Project Theme Of New 4-H Series

Pre-school children can be heard, seen and enjoyed in the theme of a new series of 4-H child development projects offered for the first time this fall by the Oregon State College Extension Service.

Boys and girls, 9 to 12 years of age, are invited to enroll in any of the three divisions of the new project "Fun With Children" now available through county extension offices. Nine and ten-year-olds, who enroll in the project, are asked to select a "fun friend", teach him finger plays and simple songs.

In the second year project, 10 and 11-year-olds, tutor their "fun friend" in more creative arts. They show him how to make and use finger paints, modeling dough and simple musical toys. Twelve-year-olds learn to appreciate individual differences among children as they observe them at play. In the third division of the project, "play experiences and toys", they play with pre-schoolers, make toys and watch youngsters play with them, study toy storage, and repair toys for a Sunday School or kindergarten class.

Oregon leads other states in approaching child development projects on an enjoyment of children basis, reports Lois Bedman, state 4-H extension agent. Previous child development projects were centered mainly on baby-sitting.

Mrs. Roberta Frasier, OSC extension family life specialist and author of the project, believes that youngsters miss the experience of taking care of younger brothers and sisters. Families are smaller today and there's less of an age span between the oldest and youngest child.

Educators have found that the 9 to 12 age group are at a favorable stage of readiness to develop positive attitudes toward children, says Mrs. Frasier. At this age they are more sensitive to others and can learn to appreciate differences in behavior among youngsters. This appreciation for young children should help them become more understanding parents, she believes.
