Census Shows 12,000 Fewer Oregon Farms Than Five Years Ago

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—Oregon has nearly 12,000 fewer farms—but bigger farms—than five years ago. Economic pressures and technological changes are given as reasons for the sharp decline in numbers and increase in size.

Stephen C Marks, Oregon State College extension economist, says farmers' attempts to maintain income in the price-cost squeeze has boosted the average size of Oregon farms to 507 acres compared with 387 acres five years ago.

This trend to bigger farms stems from addition of acreage by purchases of adjoining farms and from a 2 1/2 percent increase from new acreage, Marks explained.

Preliminary figures from Oregon's 1959 Census of Agriculture show 42,573 farms—33 percent fewer than in the peak year of 1935 when the state had 64,826 farms.

Biggest decline in the past five years came in the small-farm class of 10 to 50 acres which showed a drop in numbers of 31 percent. However, part-time farms in the 10 to 50-acre class still represent nearly half the state's total number of farms.

Farms of 50 to 100 acres comprise about 16 percent of the total, and farms from 100 to 500 acres account for 27 percent. Large farms, containing 500 acres or more, make up 12 percent of all Oregon farms.

About three-fourths of Oregon farms are operated by full owners, 19 percent by part owners, 7 percent by tenants, and less than 1 percent operated by managers. The proportion of tenants had dropped from 8.2 percent in 1954 to 7.2 percent in 1959. Other changes saw a slight increase in the average age of farm operators—now 51 years old compared with 50 years in 1954. However, there are 15 percent fewer operators 65 years of age or over. Final census data will be published by the Bureau of the Census later this fall, Marks said.
