Building Needs Under Discussion At School Meet

By MARY LEE MARLOW
BOARDMAN—The "Lights On For Education" program was presented at the school last week. Ron Daniels, principal, spoke on the bond issue, and explained potential sites for the new buildings for Riverside High school and Boardman grade school that will have to be built when the town of Boardman is moved due to water of the John Day dam inundating the present town. He spoke of the shortcomings of the present building, stating that the library is too small, and that more space is needed so that more material could be used. A study hall was also mentioned. He said the science room has a minimum footage for 15 to 18 students, and that at present there are 25 students in the biology class alone. Daniels said the building was not designed for eight teachers in the high school nor for 80 students. The band has to practice upstairs, which makes too much noise for rooms below. In the commercial room the typewriters have to be moved off the tables before they can be used for bookkeeping.
 Daniels also explained the different schedules for classes in the high school, and explained need for more subjects to be taught.
 Ronald Black explained the vocational agriculture program, and introduced the other speakers. Lester Leroux spoke on the Field of Science, mentioning his General Science classes, Physical Science, chemistry, and biology, stating that the school has good equipment. Ruth Coy explained the English department, and commercial classes. James Harper spoke on mathematics, specifically algebra and geometry. He also has physical education classes for boys. Dante Daloso explained his social science classes. LaVern Partlow spoke
