New Booklet Out On Soil Conservation

A new publication designed to help city and suburban dwellers understand soil erosion problems on their lots, gardens, and small farms has just been released by the U. S. Soil Conservation Service. It is called "Soil Conservation At Home" and interprets the Service's experience in working with farmers for non-farm people.

A copy may be obtained from the local SCS office, Gilliam and Bisbee Hardware building, Ralph J. Richards, work unit conservationist, said.

Richards, who is assigned by the SCS to assist the Heppner Soil Conservation district, said that the publication consists of 30 pages of suggestions on what the home owner can do to reduce the amount of water runoff from his lot and cut down on soil erosion.

It describes the ideal soil and how to know what kind of soil you have. There is a section on a conservation plan that includes safe disposal of water, and shrub planting to encourage helpful wildlife, particularly birds. The bulletin is illustrated with photographs showing contour gardening, miniature terraces, grass waterways and other conservation practices.
