RURAL ELECTRIFICATION...

a "do-it-yourself" project that's really paying off!

REA loans have enabled groups of rural people like us to build our own electric power lines, and have paid off in many ways for others, too. For instance, we all live better today because farmers, with the help of electricity, have tripled output per-hour-of-labor in the last 25 years!

When the Rural Electrification Administration was created in 1935, each farm worker was producing for ten people. Today, with fewer farmers, he supplies food and fiber for 25. By 1975 he'll be called on to feed 50! And he'll do it!

Electrification of rural America has attracted industry into the country, while it opened up a brand new market for makers of electrical appliances and equipment. This year alone, more than 4,500,000 farm families will spend over $1-billion for things electrical. This means more jobs, better jobs in towns and cities, too.

Truly, rural electrification has been good for all Americans!
