Oregon Farm Labor Wage Rate Third Highest in Nation

Oregon hired farm workers in 1962 received the third highest wages in the country, exceeded only by wages paid in Washington and California, reports Mrs. Elvera Horrell, Oregon State University extension agricultural economist.

The Pacific Coast region tops all others in the nation for farm wage rates, Washington, California and Oregon, in that order, led the nation, followed by Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island tied for fifth and Idaho was seventh.

Last year, Oregon's composite wage rate, simmered down to an hourly basis, averaged $1.22, up two cents from 1961. Oregon's January 1, 1963, wage rate was $1.24, two cents above the 1962 average. National rates at the start of this year were 94.8 cents, an average of two cents higher than a year earlier, she said.

The New England states, ranking second to the Pacific Coast on the wage rate scale, recorded the biggest percentage increase in wages in 1962. The Pacific Coast increased the least while the East South Central states, lowest on the wage scale, increased at about the same rate as the national average, Mrs. Horrell reported.

Family labor made up about 70 per cent of Oregon's total farm labor force last year and composed an even larger percentage of the farm labor force on a national basis. Farm labor along the Pacific Coast was most in demand in September, due to the harvest of many California crops.

Between 1945 and 1961, the number of farm workers dropped one-third while farm production increased one-third, Mrs. Horrell pointed out. The number of persons supplied with farm products by one farm worker nearly doubled during the same period.
