Al Ullman Says Current Congress 'Most Productive'

overwhelming defeat of the Republicans would be a favor to their party, adding "and I'm a great believer in the two-party system."

He said that the Republicans had "allowed a small radical element to control the party."

"We have to give the Republicans the kind of beating that will show them they have to get rid of that type of thinking and get back in the main stream," he declared. "The press is going Democratic not because it is going soft on Democrats but because they recognize freedom of speech is at stake."

He added that the Democratic candidates for president and vice president represent true responsibility.

Back to the Congress, Ullman said. "We met our responsibilities on the farm issues. We certainly couldn't let the wheat program go down the drain as many Republicans want us to do."

Alternative to the program would have been chaos in the wheat producing business, he said.

Turning to cattle imports, he said that there is a need to develop foreign markets.

"Imports have been a problem. Despite opposition, we did get a bill passed, and it will do what we want it to do."

In a question and answer period, the congressman said that the Willow Creek flood control project is in the hands of the Chief of Army Engineers and said that he feels "reasonably satisfied" that the project will receive a satisfactory report. It will then come back to the northwest for a 90-day review by all interested agencies. It still can be included in an omnibus bill late this year, if all goes well, at which time it would be authorized.

"Next year, in the 1966 budget, we would hope to have some funds, but sometimes there are road blocks."

Cong. Ullman declared strong opposition to the proposal to divert Columbia River water to California, saying that the only condition under which he would agree to such a proposal would be to be sure that the northwest had all prior rights to the water needed for its development.

He said it is possible that "some day we might see half of Morrow county under irrigation."

In reply to a question, the congressman spent some time discussing the price spread on beef between producer and consumer, saying that this probably would be a good year for the feeder but not so good for the producer.

Concerning the wheat program, he said that it was passed for two years.

"If it works, and I think it will, and if the industry supports it, it will probably be renewed."

Cong. Ullman congratulated Chairman Al Lamb on "the job he is doing in this county." Referring to registration gains in the party, he said, "We're over the hump, and we're there to stay."

He had words of praise for State Senator Ben Musa, stating that it is "necessary to keep him there," and said that Martin Buchanan, candidate for state representative, is "one of the finest candidates we have for the legislature."

He included local candidates in his commendations, and also said that "it is important to get to work statewide."

"The governor is a very able and a very astute young man, but he is in politics up to his ears," the congressman declared. He also declared that it is essential to get a change in the Republican domination of the state board of control.

Sen. Musa said in a brief talk that he had served this senatorial district for eight years but served a smaller senatorial district prior to that. He referred to his work in establishing a tax court in the State of Oregon; said that he had been instrumental in blocking a bill that would have taken the election of assessors from the voters; and pointed out the need for protection of local rights.

Candidate Buchanan reiterated his position on the matters of tax reform, the timber severance tax, water resources, and identification cards for minors.

Paul Jones, candidate for county judge, discussed his views towards establishing a long-range road program, the need for emphasizing work with youth including a part time counselor, Plaques and jackets are to be awarded the six first prize winners at an Ione Lions club dinner October 26 with parents also to be present. Other prizes given to winners included footballs, kicking tees and place kicking outfits.

Dave Barnett, sales manager for Heppner Auto Sales, was in charge of the contest with men of the Ione Lions club assisting with the officiating.

and other state highways in the county again, Parson said, "As time goes on we hope to smooth them out and make them a little better riding."

He said that work has already started widening the highway from Echo but emphasized, "We have a very difficult time determining where to spend the money allocated."

In his division, which includes all of Eastern Oregon, Parson has the responsibility of maintaining 2,500 miles of highways. Eventually, he said, he hopes to make the Willow Creek highway 32 feet wide for its full extent.

The engineer outlined plans for completing the four lanes of highway 80N between Irrigon Junction to Pendleton by segments with contracts to be let between the fall of 1965 and the fall of 1966. The Pendleton bypass is planned for the fall of 1967.
