Arlington Legal Battle Over; Realtor Ready

Final settlement of lengthy litigation over the relocation of the City of Arlington's business district prompted a statement from the Oregon Industrial Development Corporation that it is proceeding immediately to implement its agreement with the city to relocate the business district.

In a letter sent to all Arlington business interests, Dudley Jones, real estate consultant to OI, said that OI is prepared to deliver clear title immediately to all business firms which are interested in purchasing property in the new Arlington business district. The project will follow a master plan of development prepared for OI by architectural and engineering consultants.

OI originally signed an agreement with the City of Arlington on October 21, 1963 "to find suitable occupants and to finance, construct, develop, lease or sell properties, and to manage the block" of approximately 7 1/2 acres in the relocated business district, which OI purchased. The site, which covered 15 acres including offstreet parking and malls, was established by the U. S. Army Corps of Engineers on high ground above the present community, which will be flooded by the rising waters of the John Day Dam reservoir, now under construction and nearing completion.

On March 4, 1964, nine members of a newly formed "Businessmen's and Taxpayers' Association" filed suit in an effort to force the city to break its contract with OI. Subsequently, Judge E. H. Howell of the circuit court of Gilliam county found in favor of the plaintiffs and declared the city's contract with OI terminated.

On appeal to the Oregon State Supreme Court, the decision was reversed May 26, 1965. A final legal maneuver, a petition by the plaintiffs to rehear the case, was denied June 22, 1965, and the decree of the Supreme Court became final.

The letter from Jones expressed the hope that "resolution of the legal entanglements which have delayed this development for nearly 18 months will also put to rest any remaining differences of opinion which may exist between the parties," and indicated OI's intention to proceed with the development of the new city center "in a spirit of full cooperation."

Residents of Arlington, who are confronted with abandoning much of the business district of the present city later this year to allow the Corps of Engineers to proceed with its work on John Day Dam, were invited by Jones to contact him immediately to negotiate terms and conditions for the purchase of property in the new community.

Board Says Turtles May Carry Ailment

The Oregon State Board of Health today warned that pet turtles are carriers of salmonellosis. While the disease does not cause any ill effect to turtles, it does produce rather serious illness in humans, Dr. Richard H. Wilcox, state health officer, said. Most human infections of salmonellosis result from eating contaminated food. Poor personal or family hygiene and sanitation are also frequently noted as causes of the disease. The illness is usually of the gastrointestinal type. Symptoms of the disease include vomiting, nausea, headache, cramps, sweating and general debility which may persist for a few hours to several days.

Dr. Wilcox urges persons possessing pet turtles to observe the following precautions:

1. Children should handle turtles only with the understanding that they will wash their hands immediately after such a contact.
2. Water from containers which have held the turtles should not be dumped in the kitchen sink thereby avoiding contamination of the food preparation area.
3. Other household pets should be prevented from drinking water from the turtle dish.
4. If children are too young to observe the above precautions, parents should understand they risk salmonellosis infection of the family and the family's pets.
