

River Waterfront Study Outlines Plans for Future

Recommendations for specific use of the Mid-Columbia region's 163 miles of Columbia River waterfront are made in a planning study report prepared by the Division of Planning and Development, Oregon Department of Commerce, for the Mid-Columbia Planning Council.

Maps totaling some 15 lineal feet are required to describe the land use allocation and development plan for the regional waterfront strip two to six miles in width and reaching from the Wallula Gap on the east to the Multnomah County line on the west.

The development plan includes all of the Columbia River frontage in the six counties of Hood River, Wasco, Sherman, Gilliam, Morrow and Umatilla.

Recommended allocations are made for the shorelands among urban, industrial, agricultural, recreational and wildlife use. More than 24 man-months went into the studies and preparation of the report, plus another 12 man-months into background reports prepared by other agencies and consultants and utilized in the development plan.

The plan is described as a "logical and rational allocation of land use that will encourage the expansion and diversification of the region's economic bases of agriculture, industry and recreation."

Objectives and guidelines in the report are "based on the assumption that the people of the region desire orderly development of their lands so as to conserve its natural resources and beauty, enhance their environment, and stimulate further diversity of the economy."

Objectives and recommendations for action include:

On urbanization, adoption of a master plan and its implementation by "land use" ordinances is recommended to local governments to achieve the objective of conserving prime agricultural land and of restricting urbanization to existing communities to provide urban facilities at minimal cost.

To preserve the scenic and recreational assets of the Columbia, industrial development should be carefully guided and controlled at planned industrial centers, which have high standards of design, construction, landscaping and maintenance.

To provide for development of recreational resources to their optimum potential, recommended action includes acquisition and development of major recreational areas by responsible agencies, convenient highway access, small boat facilities in or near major recreational sites, more viewpoints, wayside parks,

Achievement Date Set

Date of this year's 4-H Achievement Party has been scheduled for Saturday, November 5, at 7:30 p.m., in Heppner, according to Mrs. Louis Carlson, lone. All members of 4-H clubs in the county are asked to reserve this date for this annual meeting.

and historical markers, and consideration to a regional museum in a site overlooking the Columbia Gorge.

A population of up to 125,000 people is expected in the six-county region by the decade of the 1980's with some 50,000 people in the regional waterfront area. Increasing population and urbanization, the report states, will require more attention to long-range planning for water supplies, sewage treatment and refuse disposal and other public facilities and services.

Other possible requirements in public facilities include expansion of existing hospitals, a community college, and a regional museum.

Salvation Army Sets Mail Appeal To Finish Drive

Final phase of this year's Salvation Army fund appeal will be a mail effort to contact all those whom it was not possible to reach in person. Mrs. Major Minnie Parsons was in Heppner earlier this month contacting as many community leaders as possible to inform them of the work of the Army throughout Morrow county.

Response to this mail appeal and by other local citizens is necessary to maintain all the services provided through the local service extension committee to those in need throughout the area for the coming year.

Last year through the Salvation Army service extension, 93 days' care was provided for unwed mothers from the county at a cost of $692.00 at the White Shield Home and Hospital in Portland. This is one of some 23 different services provided by the Salvation Army through the local service extension committee, including emergency medical aid, food, clothing, lodging, disaster and transient aid.

Lowell Chally, Heppner, chairman, extended thanks to all those of Morrow county who have already done their part in supporting the work of the volunteer service extension committee who form "an Army behind the Army." He urged those who have not yet contributed to mail their checks to Bill Slewert, treasurer, Heppner.

Others serving on the Salvation Army Morrow County committee are Judge Paul Jones, Chief of Police Dean Gilman, Sheriff C. J. D. Bauman, Rev. Billie Alsop, Dr. L. D. Tibbles, Rev. Melvin Dixon, David Potter, Wesley Sherman, and Eugene P. Winters, all of Heppner, Philip Goodall of Irrigon and Dewey West of Boardman.

Ag Economists Expect Higher Market Prices

Although a few of its riders will miss the brass ring, that merry-go-round called the United States economy will continue turning to the tune of prosperity.

Writing in the current issue of Oregon's Farm and Market Outlook circular, Oregon State University Extension agricultural economists say that wheat prices will depend heavily on what happens to production between now and next July. They also look for higher potato and onion prices this fall and winter and favorable 1967 livestock market prices.

In viewing the general economy, Stephen Marks, OSU agricultural economist, says that present indicators point in favor of the optimists who look for a continued upward thrust in business activity, although they recognize some sectors of the economy may be somewhat draggy.

He said that most observers look for a further rapid rise in wholesale and consumer prices in 1967 despite efforts to curb inflation.

"The past five-year period of cost stability looks like it will soon be only a pleasant memory," he said.

Marion Thomas observed that most Oregon farmers will be able to harvest all the grain they like in 1967 without losing federal program benefits. Allotments have been increased to about 80 per cent of plantings before the 1954 quotas went into effect and wheat may be substituted for barley on diverted land.

Domestic prices will depend heavily on day-to-day decisions regarding export certificates and export payment rates, he noted.

As for potatoes, Marks said signs point to a bigger fall crop in Oregon but a smaller one nationally, hence higher prices.

The important Idaho crop is having one of the worst growing seasons on record with scattered frosts serving up the coup de grace in late August. The size of Idaho's fall crop will influence Oregon prices.

Oregon may produce a fall crop of 9.7 million sacks compared with 9.3 million last year. Onion growers should enjoy better prices as the 1966 U. S. crop promises to be one of the small ones produced in recent years, according to Marks. New York is down a third and California expects 11 per cent more onions. Western Oregon growers may harvest a slightly larger crop, but eastern Oregon and Idaho crops may be 5 per cent smaller.

Provided the drought does not get worse, cattle and lamb prices may be as good or better than in 1966, according to Marks. Hogs are likely to average lower, but not as low as in some recent years.

He said poultry and pork promise to be more plentiful in 1967, but beef may be scarcer. The reason is that cyclical adjustments whittled down cattle numbers in 1965 and slaughter continued heavy this year. This means fewer cattle for market in 1967.

There is strong evidence that feeders are not curtailing feedlot replacements despite higher feed costs and high interest on borrowed money. Feed supplies for the year ahead promise to be smaller than last season but somewhat larger than expected earlier. The long range outlook for feed cattle prices indicate favorable returns from feedlot operations.

The slaughter volume of lambs so far this year indicates stability in numbers of stock sheep and about the same size lamb crop in 1967 as in 1966. Marks said that how far hog prices drop depends on production responses to changes in prices, size of the corn crop and corn prices.

Copies of the current outlook circulars are available from county extension offices of the OSU Bulletin Clerk.

Mann Applauds P-I, Fair Merger

Representative Irvin Mann, Jr. (R Stanfield), vice-president of the Pacific International Livestock Exposition, applauded the action of the Multnomah County Commissioners in consolidating the Multnomah County Fair with the P-I at the County Exposition Center in North Portland.

Mann predicted that consolidation would have far-reaching effect on the livestock industry in the Pacific Northwest and an outstanding staging area for the important livestock events necessary to better understanding between the livestock industry and residents of the urban population center.

Mann pointed out that the expansion program now underway at the North Portland site is exactly the improvement that the legislature hoped for when passing the legislation which he introduced enabling Multnomah county to take over the facility. Since taking over in September of 1965, Multnomah county has spent $400,000.00 on improvements and plans call for more improvements. A grandstand and race track before the County Fair opens there in 1969.
