Window Treatment To be Discussed At Coming Meet

By MARJORIE WILCOXEN
Home Extension Agent

Attend the "Window Treatment" meeting April 17 at the Heppner Fair Annex—1:00 to 3:00 p.m.

Windows provide the outlook for those inside a house, but they also present problems of privacy, heat from the sun, cold air in winter, and glare. More than one kind of treatment may be necessary to provide complete comfort. A window shade or drapery that gives privacy at night will block out light and view in the daytime; a sheer curtain that gives privacy during the day will not give privacy at night when the lights are turned on. Two or more window coverings can be used together.

One unusual pairing is the use of two window shades at the same window. The shade nearest the glass can be transparent vinyl or a sheer fabric that admits light. Gray vinyl blocks heat from the sun, and protects home furnishings from sun fading. The view from the inside is similar to that seen through sunglasses. Daytime privacy is provided because the view from the outside is blocked. An opaque shade can be hung in front of the transparent or translucent shade and looks like a valance in the daytime, but is pulled for complete privacy at night.

New materials and new window fashions are constantly enlarging the number of choices or alternatives of window treatments. There is no "right" way to treat a window, except the way that meets practical requirements and has an attractive appearance.

At the meeting Monday, April 17, I will discuss ways of using sheer glass curtains, cottage or cafe curtains, draperies, blinds screens, panels and other types of window coverings.

The number one childhood disease today is measles. It is not harmless and often leaves lifelong after effects.

Nine out of ten children get measles before the twelfth birthday; four out of ten contract it before the age of five.
