Building Gone; Leveling Starts

All evidence of the building that for 77 years occupied the northwest corner of the Main and Center street intersection vanished last week. The wrecking job was completed and leveling was started to prepare the site for a new service station to be built there.

But while the structure is gone, memories linger on, and a number of persons have called or written to tell more about the building. O. M. Yeager wrote from Castle Rock, Wash., to say that the structure should properly be called the "McFarland Building" because it was built by the McFarland family (first name not given) to establish a store there.

Mrs. Gus (Mary) Nickander said that the building was erected in 1890. She is a sister of Allen Case, former furniture store owner in Heppner. Their father, M. L. Case, bought the building in 1926, and operated a store there. Allen and Gus Nickander started a Marshall-Wells store in the building in 1946. The Nickanders took over the structure three years ago during the settlement of the Case estate.

Miss Lou Hager, sister of Mrs. A. D. McMurdo, lived in an apartment in the building for some 30 years. She worked in the office of Dr. A. D. McMurdo during much of that time.

Cornerstone of the building has been placed in the museum, and the mantle of the fireplace that was in the second story room has been loaned to the museum.

Mrs. Nina Snyder called to report that the Masons used the upstairs for a meeting hall for a time and also that Mrs. Norah Rasmus at one time had a dress shop there, adding two more things to the wide variety of uses of the building.

Canada's Expo '67 Described in Talk

Montreal was literally torn apart for Expo '67.

This was the way Richard Robillard, San Francisco, a Canadian immigration officer, described the feverish preparations that Canada has been making for its World's Fair this year. He spoke before the Heppner-Morrow County Chamber of Commerce May 22 and showed a film of the work in progress in Montreal.

Canada has had only five years to prepare for the mammoth event, he said. An island in the St. Lawrence River was expanded from 315 acres to 1000 acres by landfill.

With delays, people started referring to "Expo 69" and "Expo 70," Robillard said. But a new subway has been built, new hotels and motels have been constructed. Montreal now can accommodate 300,000 persons per night and trailer sites can accommodate another 400,000 per month.

"The City of Montreal has gone to great pains to control prices," the speaker said. Overcharging of rent subjects the owner to a $3,000 fine.

Once in the Expo gates, the visitor has at his disposition more than 200 free shows. But to see it all, the speaker said, a person would have to attend every day for 3 1/2 months. More than 60 countries have exhibits. West Berlin's has been acclaimed the most outstanding, and the U. S. pavilion is said to be second best.

An $18 million electric railway has been built around the perimeter of the grounds, but a mini-rail has been built at a cost of $10 million to take visitors to high points of interest.

Meanwhile every city in Canada has programs and events to observe their Centennial year.

The Canadians seem to have thought of everything for their Expo '67. Even those who have to wait in line should enjoy it. They will be furnished entertainment while they wait.

President Herman Winter introduced the speaker.

Heppner Boosters Support Projects

Heppner Boosters club has voted to help with two projects for the benefit of the schools. Principal Dick Carpenter of Heppner High school announced.

The board of directors of the club voted on May 23 to purchase library books in the amount of $25 each for Heppner Elementary and Heppner High school. They also voted to donate $125 for a trampoline to be used in the physical education program of both schools.

Carpenter said that a small amount of student body funds of each school will supplement the donation for the trampoline to complete the purchase.

Purpose of the Boosters is to support the total school program, and not only the athletics program. Al Boschee is president of the Boosters.

Spec./4 Gary Van Blokland, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Van Blokland of Heppner, will be seen on a nationally distributed Army re-enlistment poster according to word received by his parents. Pictures for the poster were taken in October and Gary recently sent a sample which is now on display at Van's Variety. He is stationed at Ft. Belvoir, Va.

Canada's Expo '67 Described in Talk

Montreal was literally torn apart for Expo '67.

This was the way Richard Robillard, San Francisco, a Canadian immigration officer, described the feverish preparations that Canada has been making for its World's Fair this year. He spoke before the Heppner-Morrow County Chamber of Commerce May 22 and showed a film of the work in progress in Montreal.

Canada has had only five years to prepare for the mammoth event, he said. An island in the St. Lawrence River was expanded from 315 acres to 1000 acres by landfill.

With delays, people started referring to "Expo 69" and "Expo 70," Robillard said. But a new subway has been built, new hotels and motels have been constructed. Montreal now can accommodate 300,000 persons per night and trailer sites can accommodate another 400,000 per month.

"The City of Montreal has gone to great pains to control prices," the speaker said. Overcharging of rent subjects the owner to a $3,000 fine.

Once in the Expo gates, the visitor has at his disposition more than 200 free shows. But to see it all, the speaker said, a person would have to attend every day for 3 1/2 months. More than 60 countries have exhibits. West Berlin's has been acclaimed the most outstanding, and the U. S. pavilion is said to be second best.

An $18 million electric railway has been built around the perimeter of the grounds, but a mini-rail has been built at a cost of $10 million to take visitors to high points of interest.

Meanwhile every city in Canada has programs and events to observe their Centennial year.

The Canadians seem to have thought of everything for their Expo '67. Even those who have to wait in line should enjoy it. They will be furnished entertainment while they wait.

President Herman Winter introduced the speaker.

Building Gone; Leveling Starts

All evidence of the building that for 77 years occupied the northwest corner of the Main and Center street intersection vanished last week. The wrecking job was completed and leveling was started to prepare the site for a new service station to be built there.

But while the structure is gone, memories linger on, and a number of persons have called or written to tell more about the building. O. M. Yeager wrote from Castle Rock, Wash., to say that the structure should properly be called the "McFarland Building" because it was built by the McFarland family (first name not given) to establish a store there.

Mrs. Gus (Mary) Nickander said that the building was erected in 1890. She is a sister of Allen Case, former furniture store owner in Heppner. Their father, M. L. Case, bought the building in 1926, and operated a store there. Allen and Gus Nickander started a Marshall-Wells store in the building in 1946. The Nickanders took over the structure three years ago during the settlement of the Case estate.

Miss Lou Hager, sister of Mrs. A. D. McMurdo, lived in an apartment in the building for some 30 years. She worked in the office of Dr. A. D. McMurdo during much of that time.

Cornerstone of the building has
