Computer Wonders Described in Talk At Chamber Meet

A machine that can read hand-written documents with 99.1 per cent accuracy and sort and classify the documents without any limitations as to the size or arrangement of the paper was one of the wonders that Jim Dyer of Richland, Wn., resident manager for the IBM Company, brought to the attention of the Heppner-Morrow County Chamber of Commerce Monday, May 15.

The machine, he said, is equipped with a cathode ray tube. When it finds a character that it cannot "read," it displays the character on the tube for the operator to decipher.

However, the machine is so programmed that the writing may have quite a latitude. There are certain ways in which the letters must be formed, but there is quite a bit of flexibility.

Dyer said that data processing dates back to the census of 1880 when the accumulated information was not compiled until about 1887.

On data processing machines, the card is the primary basis for entrance and exit of information going in and out of the machine. A girl can punch from 7000 to 10,000 characters per hour on cards.

A major stride forward in handling documents was the use of magnetic ink. Machines can now read from 900 to 2000 magnetically printed documents per minute and sort in classification.

Fifty major concerns are now manufacturing and operating data processing equipment and there is need for 50,000 persons
