Lieutenant Tells Work in Vietnam On Agriculture

Work being done in Vietnam to assist the civilian population on food and agriculture is described by Lt. Van G. Decker, chief of a food and agriculture team, Quartermaster Corps, in a letter to Gail McCarty, Morrow county extension agent.

Lt. Decker, whose home is in Philomath, was a roommate of McCarty when they attended Oregon State University. Before going to service, Decker worked for six or eight months at the First National Bank in Prineville. He graduated from Oregon State University in 1965, is married, and his wife is living in Albany while he is overseas.

A summary of activities Lt. Decker included in the letter describes what is being done in agriculture with the Vietnamese, and is reprinted as a matter of interest to show the range of work being done: Numerous visits have been made to many Marine units and Vietnamese groups during April. These visits have been made to give assistance with agriculture problems and to find more potential areas where the services of the Food and Agriculture team personnel can be utilized.

The Vietnamese have shown an increasing interest in livestock production. Also, many of them are interested in purchasing boar pigs of American breeding to use in upbreeding their Vietnamese type females. A trip was made to Nha Trang, Dalat, and Phan Rang in II Corps area to study livestock and vegetable production and marketing. The overall picture of vegetable production and marketing operations in II Corps was discussed with agricultural representatives. Swine production was discussed and a large swine farm visited.

White potatoes were planted as a demonstration at the Catholic orphanage in east Danang. These potatoes are growing well. The demonstration garden planted near Hill 55 south of Danang was partially damaged by mortar fire and the remainder is being cleared as part of a vegetation clearing project due to security conditions for the bridge nearby.

After inspection of pigs in hamlets of 1st Tank Bn. TAOR, the Food and Ag Team chief determined the pigs had worms. Worm medicine was taken to the farmers and treatment administered. A visit was made to the refugee garden project north of Chu Lai. Ky Hoa Island was visited where Lt. Davis has encouraged a group of 10 farmers to plant a large garden. The progress of the rice harvest was also checked on in the Binh area south of Chu Lai.

The Food and Ag Team traveled to Hue to experiment with the mechanical rice harvester which had been purchased from Japan. The machine was well accepted by the Vietnamese farmers. Deliver Seeds: A trip was made to Gia Vuc special forces camp to deliver vegetable seeds and plant two demonstration gardens in the Montagnard hamlets nearby.

Returning from Gia Vuc, Lt. Decker and Pfc. Miller stopped at Duc Pho to check on progress of the fish pond constructed by the RD team under direction of Lt. Henry. The pond is ready for the fish which will be flown in from Pleiku. A visit was made to Hoa Cong Village south of the Danang airfield to inspect crops which were reported dying. It was determined the plants had been infected with stem borers, worms, and aphids which had severely damaged the crop.

The tobacco was severely infested with aphids and showed evidence of spray damage. The taro had been attacked by worms which had cut the leaves severely, and they also were damaged by the spray. The sweet potatoes showed severe damage by a virus which had partially destroyed the tubers. The tubers had started to deteriorate with many rotten spots in them.

has yielded an average crop with some areas being below normal because of a lack of available irrigation water and fertilizer. Water shortage was very critical in some areas because of damage to irrigation structures by the Viet Cong.

Good Crops Seen: In the areas surrounding Gia Vuc, Lt. Decker reported exceptionally good crops, saying, "The rice was the best I have seen in I Corps. They are growing a considerable amount of sweet corn which was brought in by the French. A nearby banana plantation showed evidence of good horticultural practices being followed. The only evident reason for the good production is the sufficient water supply and strict control of the people by the VC which are in control of the area."

"The farmers co-op at Dien Ban is successfully harvesting its watermelon crop. The first sale of 400 watermelons was made to the Marine Procurement Agency. This shows the success which can be made producing vegetables."

At Nha Trang a large swine farm was visited. This farmer has 150 Yorkshire brood sows and raises all his feeder pigs to market size before selling them at around 250 pounds. He purchases mess hall garbage from military installations to use as his basic food stuff. The garbage is cooked and fed to the pigs in troughs in their all-concrete pens.

In the Gia Vuc area of Quang Ngai Province, a Yorkshire boar has been used to cross breed with the local Vietnamese females and has resulted in an outstanding upbreeding of the local Vietnamese pigs. This type breeding program can be used to improve the entire pork production capabilities.
