Morse Seeks Funds To Fight Erosion

Senator Wayne Morse, D-Ore., today asked for $5 million to fight erosion problems on western watershed lands managed by the Bureau of Land Management.

In a letter to President Johnson, Morse noted that the BLM has accepted bids totaling more than $500 million for oil drilling rights on the outer continental shelf.

He urged the President to ask for a budget increase for BLM for fiscal 1969 of one percent of the bonus bids for the oil rights.

Morse said the BLM manages almost 470 million acres of public land, more federal lands than all the other government agencies combined, and "year after year it earns far more money than its budget."

Morse said the land is vital to the west, and much of it is in critical condition. He said some of the profits from our public lands should be reinvested in their conservation.

Morse was joined by 13 other western senators in sending the letter to President Johnson.
