Chaff and Chatter
Wes Sherman

ONE FEW TIMES IN HIS LIFE was Burkenbine aware of a "slight type of plane, a wad" while traveling on an emergency or urgent business knows the irritation that Mr. Burkenbine felt when the plane finally lifted off the runway at the airport.

The plane was crowded with people, and the passengers were all seated close to one another, making it difficult for Mr. Burkenbine to get comfortable. He was eager to get to his destination, but the plane seemed to be taking forever to take off.

Finally, the plane started to move, and Mr. Burkenbine was able to settle into his seat. He was relieved to have finally taken off, but he couldn't help but feel a sense of relief when they finally arrived at their destination.

The plane finally landed, and Mr. Burkenbine was able to get off. He felt a sense of satisfaction knowing that he had finally arrived at his destination, and he couldn't wait to get on with his business.

Though the flight was long and uncomfortable, Mr. Burkenbine was grateful to have finally taken off and reached his destination.
