Progress Reported on City Water Project

By DONNA EPPENBACH

IRRIGON—The November meeting of the Irrigon city council, with Marge Shade and John Henner absent, centered around progress on the proposed city water system.

After hearing a report on water project status from Mayor Chester Wilson, stating that applications for water service were coming in slowly, a resolution was adopted, aimed at getting the necessary support to get the project underway. Since repayment of funds must be made directly from revenue, 48 services will be required to finance the project, at the presently set minimum monthly charge of $5.95. Only 35 of this required number has responded to appeals for action, leaving 13 remaining.

The resolution spelled out a program where some, who have vacant lots and no immediate plan to build, could underwrite the needed services and later be relieved of the guaranteed minimum payment as actual services were connected. This would allow the council to proceed with engineering, bonding, contracts, etc., and forestall the possibility of expiration of the period when approved. Federal funds are available. Some have expressed their willingness to cooperate in such a plan.

Another related resolution gave the mayor power to sign special water use agreements with the Adventist and Catholic churches. Other public buildings used exclusively for meetings and related activities and having its own meter could qualify. Others presently within the City have situations that would not place them in this category as they have presently applied for service.

A motion was passed above the mayor's protest stipulating that those served by the present water supply, which was made available under an emergency condition, be notified that this service would be discontinued as of March 15, 1968, should the proposed water system be abandoned because of lack of subscribers and that no future funds would be allowed for its repair.

Signing of a legal agreement with City attorney Donald Morrison for anticipated services in connection with the water project was deferred to a future meeting. FHA approval must be secured before the City can enter into it.

Also deferred to the next meeting was a tree-planting project along the highway through town. This would need to be submitted to the Highway Department for approval and cost data was lacking at this time.
