New Child Labor Rules Outlined

New rules and regulations governing child labor are now in effect, according to Jack Ross, State Extension Agent at Oregon State University.
 Under the new rules, which went into effect January 1, 16 occupations in agriculture have been declared hazardous to children under 16 years of age. Among the occupations listed are: handling of chemical pesticides, handling explosives, serving as a flagman for aircraft, serving as a truck or bus driver on public roads, operating a tractor of over 20-horsepower, operating a power-driven post-hole digger, operating a power-driven saw, working from a ladder or scaffold at a height of over 20 feet, and working in a pen, yard or stall containing a dairy bull, boar, or stud horse.
 The ban also includes operating, feeding or unlogging power-driven balers, grinders, choppers, soil fillers, roughage blowers, auger conveyers and combines.
 Exceptions to the new regulations will include children employed by their parents and student-learners meeting requirements spelled out by the Department of Labor.
 The new regulations are part of the Child Labor Regulations prohibiting the employment of children in hazardous occupations. These are interim regulations and will expire January 1, 1970, unless amended earlier.
 The full text of the regulations can be found in the Federal Register, Vol. 32, No. 216, November 7, 1967, Ross said. Copies of the register and further information can be obtained at county extension offices and the Department of Employment.
