Sketch Shows Proposed New College Building

THIS SKETCH shows the proposed third building for Blue Mountain Community College, Pendleton, on which voters will cast ballots Tuesday, April 2, from 8 a.m. until 8 p.m. at polling places used for local school elections. (List of polling places for each area in Morrow county is on page 6, section 1, of this paper). The cost of construction for the building, third and final phase in the college building program, would be covered by a bond issue. Part of the cost will be covered by $250,000 to be contributed by the state by legislative action, provided that the voter approval is given and decision is definite by June of this year. Otherwise the state fund will divert to some other community college district.

The bond issue would be repaid over a 20-year period. It would absorb a current serial levy approved two years ago by voters for construction on the college's vocational-technical building. By absorbing the serial levy, the amount to be levied to taxes would be somewhat less than at present over the next three years, but the indebtedness will extend over a longer period.

Also on the ballot Tuesday will be the budget for the college for the year 1968-69, which, according to President Wallace McCrae of the college, is holding at about the same level as last year and will cost taxpayers about 90c per each $1,000 true cash value of property assessed.

Phase III of the building program is designed to meet increasing needs of the college, add some departments and to take care of the rapid growth of the student body. One reason that the budget for 1968-69 can be held to a similar figure to the current year despite increasing costs is the fact that the heavy growth in the number of students is providing a corresponding increase in the receipts from tuition, President McCrae said.

In the sketch above, the large figures indicate the various general portions of the building as follows: 1. Student center, 2. Conference rooms, office areas, storage, 3. Kitchen for student center (at left) and rest rooms (right), 4. Bookstore, 5. Study center with book storage area at right, 6. Lecture hall to seat 225-250, with speech and drama classroom and theatre workshop areas below. (Largest space available now for lectures seats only 90, which has posed a problem, college instructors state), 7. Library, 8. (Note three separate areas) Student classrooms, one designed to include audio-visual, another designed to serve as two classrooms by using dividing folding doors, 9. Agricultural classroom, 10. Arts and music areas to provide for course for which there is a demand but currently no provision at the college.

Not shown is an upper level of the library which will house faculty offices, faculty lounge and reference stacks of books. Also not shown is a lower level to the left wing which will house journalism classroom, mechanical room, space for student activities and storage space.

It is expected that if the building is approved by voters, it will be ready for use by the fall term, 1969.

and other facilities, will be constructed if voters approve a $1,250,000 bond issue at a special election in the two-county district (Morrow and Umatilla) Tuesday, April 2. Details of the building are described above. All registered voters are eligible to cast ballots at the special election.
