The PUBLIC WELFARE Question

(Questions about public fare which are of general interest can be sent to the PUBLIC WELFARE QUESTION, c/o this newspaper, for answer in this column. Help with individual problems is available at your county welfare office.)

Do foster parents have to take more than one child?

No. A foster home can be certified for one child or more, depending upon the preference of the foster parents, their physical facilities and their ability to care for a specified number of children.

My parents receive old age assistance, and I understand I am responsible for contributing a certain amount per month. Should I pay the money to the Welfare Department or to my parents?

You may do whichever you prefer. If you pay your support directly to your parents, it would be advisable for you to notify the welfare department of the amount you are paying to be sure that the contribution is considered in the recipients' monthly assistance plan. This method would enable the relative responsibility department to identify your payments and apply them as credits against your legal liability.

What do you do when people get too old to take care of themselves?

Aged, infirm people who cannot take care of themselves can be placed in a nursing home or home for the aged if their condition requires it. Sometimes these people prefer to remain at home and are able to do so with part time household help. Public welfare can provide such help for them if this seems to be the best plan. In the individual case where the elderly person is confused and unable to manage his money, assistance may be paid through a guardian or conservator appointed by the court.

Could a mother still get ADC for her children if she could support herself by working?

Need for ADC is determined by computing the total need in the household, including that of the mother and the children and deducting any income. Therefore, if the mother's job were sufficient to provide only a part of the support for the household, Aid to Dependent Children funds could supplement, but her need would not be figured separately from that of the children and she would still be included in the Aid to Dependent Children grant.

Ullman Requests Project Funds

Congressman Al Ullman has told a House Appropriations subcommittee that "because of drought conditions in Oregon, continued water resource development is essential to the Second District."

Commenting on current fiscal pressures, Ullman said, "As a member of the Ways and Means Committee, I full well realize the need for economy in the budget. But I hope the Committee will realize the wisdom and priority of resource development in any year." He said that because of the need to cut expenditures his requests included only those projects in the President's budget.

Dogs Take Honors At Recent Showings

Visitors at the Norman Clow home Friday, April 26, were Mr. and Mrs. Don Callahan of Bend, who accompanied the Clows on Friday, to the All Breed Dog show at Walla Walla, where Black Butte's Touche, the Clow's two-year-old Brittany Spaniel, took reserve winners bitch. The group attended another dog showing Saturday in Richland and the All Breed Showing at Morley Horse Ranch in Yakima on Sunday. In both the Saturday and Sunday showings, the Spaniel took winner's bitch and best of opposite sex, giving her 5 points for each showing totaling 10 for the 15 needed to assure her a championship.

The Clows have four dogs, two of which are champions and a third who has earned 10 points toward the 15 necessary for championship. The family has many trophies and awards to show for their years of dog training, and devote much time and energy toward raising and training the dogs for appearances in dog shows around the country.

Grim Predictions Voiced for 1968 Forest Season

Grim predictions of the 1968 Forest Fire Season were voiced by various top forestry officials at the annual meeting of the Keep Oregon Green Board of Trustees held in Salem recently.

They pointed to the limited snow pack in the mountains of the past winter and other factors that point to another extremely dry season.

The annual report of the Keep Oregon Green Association gives in detail an account of last year's worst fire season. More forest fires were reported in Oregon's forests than in any previous year. There were 1,327 man-caused fires and 1,814 fires were caused by lightning. Not since 1941 had Oregon's forests received so many lightning strikes. 43,045 acres were burned over.

It was also the year when fire prevention efforts reached new heights. A record amount of fire prevention material was distributed. This included 6,361 Oregon Green Guard Kits, 467 Teacher's Fire Prevention Kits, 20,000 Smokey Bear posters and leaflets, 230,000 fire warning table place mats, films, slides and displays used at County Fairs and other gatherings. There were 50,000 penalty slips warning persons not to flip burning material from automobiles which were distributed at State Parks, Service Stations and automobile registration offices.

Oregon State Police reported that their officers made 171 arrests last summer for throwing lighted material from motor vehicles along Oregon's State Highways.

Gene D. Knudson, Willamette Industries, Inc., Portland was elected president of the Keep Oregon Green Association for 1968 and 1969. Irvin M. Luiten, Weyerhaeuser Company, Portland, was elected vice president. Retiring President Garnett E. Cannon, Portland, was given the Association award of Distinguished Service for outstanding support of forest fire prevention education.

Ex-Governor Tells Need for Passage of Bond Measure

Goal of "Project: Citizen Understanding" — an information campaign to inform Oregon voters of the needs of state colleges, universities and community colleges—was signaled recently, by former Governor Robert D. Holmes, new chairman of Colleges for Oregon's Future.

Holmes said Oregon lags behind other states in adopting this form of paying for needed college and university facilities. "Most states have bonded this way for building for years and years," he said.

System of Higher Education doubling in the past eight years, and community college enrollment expected to quadruple in the next decade, Holmes pointed to the great and immediate need for additional classrooms and laboratories. "Passage of this measure," Holmes added, "will let us in an orderly way add to pay-as-you-go with 'Pay as You Grow.' I think this is the only way we can insure the necessary buildings."

Holmes praised the foresight of the Oregon Legislature, which referred this measure to the voters, in limiting the bonding potential to three-fourths of one percent of the true cash value of property in the state. "This is to prevent bonding from getting out of hand," he added.

Most important, it is the orderly way to finance what's necessary in higher education and community colleges, Holmes said. "If Oregon must rely on the money in the General Fund at each legislative session," the former governor added, "then we will fall so far behind that it will hurt our young people's education for two or three decades."

The information campaign being conducted throughout the state by Colleges for Oregon's Future, features many discussion groups, and later Town Hall meetings in the counties.

Colleges for Oregon's Future is a non-partisan citizens organization dedicated to public understanding of the needs of higher education. Holmes became chairman last month, succeeding former Governor Charles A. Sprague who had served in this post since the founding of CFOF in 1960. Another former governor, Elmo Smith, is on the state Colleges for Oregon's Future Committee.
