Radio Broadcasting Course Announced

A new curriculum in radio broadcasting will be offered by Blue Mountain Community College starting September 30. It was announced yesterday by President Wallace McCrae.

Designed to prepare graduates for work in radio stations, the new course will include both theory and actual practice in radio broadcasting. Courses in introduction to journalism and news reporting will also be included.

The program was added to the college's curriculum as a result of requests from the Oregon Association of Broadcasters and radio station operators in the area. Students enrolled may take a full two-year curriculum and graduate with an Associate of Science degree.

Under present plans, the first year will be devoted largely to introductory courses with the second year reserved mainly for advanced work and practical experience on the air. Area radio stations have offered to assist in the program.
