Camp Easter Seal Schedules Dates For Five Sessions

Dates have been set for five sessions of Camp Easter Seal, Oregon's only summer camp for the exclusive use of physically handicapped youngsters and young adults, according to James M. Torson, executive director of the Easter Seal Society.

The first session will get underway June 15 and continue through June 24. The initial camp will be for youngsters, boys and girls, from 7 through 10 years of age. Other sessions are scheduled as follows: June 28-July 7 (11-13 years); July 11-20 (14-16 years); July 24-Aug. 2 (17-20 years); and Aug. 6-15 (21 years and over).

Information about the camp and applications for enrollment are being received now at society headquarters, 4343 S. W. Corbett ave., Portland. The camp is located on North Lake of Ten Mile lake, near Reedsport. Torson said a minimal fee is charged campers, but there are campships available for those who are unable to meet the fee. Campships are provided by fraternal and civic organizations as well as by individuals.

Attendants are permitted for youngsters whose physical condition requires that someone be available to help them, Torson explained. There are also volunteers who assist the campers at all sessions.

Last year 115 children and 32 young adults attended the sessions, including 66 who were in wheelchairs. Activities are geared to the physical limitations of the campers, Torson explained, and include boating, campouts, wiener roasts, swimming, craftwork and other programs associated with summer camps for youngsters.

Predator Control Budget $467,968

Oregon's program for control of predators and rodents, which is participated in by the state, federal government and most counties, will cost $467,968 for the fiscal year 1969-70 under the budget approved at a late February meeting of the Interagency Predator and Rodent Control Committee.

The budget is $15,282 higher than the one for 1968-69. It would include $45,000 from the State Department of Agriculture, $40,000 from the State Game Commission, $226,581 in county funds and the remainder in federal funds. The U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service is the participating federal agency.

Accounting for $9,795 of the increase are salary and fringe benefit increases for the trappers employed under the programs.

In a review of the programs for the coming fiscal year the committee made plans for accelerating control measures for nutria, who are increasing in the Willamette Valley area. Both coyotes and fox were reported on the increase and concern was voiced that the heavy snow pack in the mountains might push the coyotes further down toward the valley areas. Fox, the committee said, had been reported in areas where they previously were scarce.

Federal representatives on the committee said fur prices are better now than they had been in many years and expected to remain good and indicated they were hopeful this would stimulate people bothered by predators to do some control work on their own.

During the committee's meeting Virgil Hiatt, chief chemist, State Department of Agriculture, explained revisions that would be made in the state's pesticide law by House Bill 1335, one of which would prohibit use of pesticides not registered with the department.

Hiatt also discussed with the committee the department's equipment for making toxicology tests on animals and gave the committee an estimate of the cost of running tests made under the predator control program.

Volunteers to Aid Cancer Crusade Throughout April

Thousands of volunteers throughout Oregon will participate in the annual "cancer crusade" of the American Cancer Society during April, distributing educational materials and seeking funds to support the society's programs in research, education and service.

John Matschek of Portland, Oregon crusade chairman, pointed out that $231,469 in crusade funds were at work in research projects in Oregon during the past year, including $133,185 from the national headquarters of the ACS in New York.

Throughout the United States, Matschek said, approximately $18 million in crusade funds are being allocated annually for research projects. Since the research program of the ACS was started in 1947, more than $180 million has gone into research.

"No one can question the advisability of spending such huge sums for research that will eventually lead to the answers about cancer," the chairman stated, "but the sad fact is that there are many worthwhile research projects that cannot be pursued because of lack of funds."

Gov. Tom McCall has urged Oregonians to support the April crusade, not only by giving their money, but by making a serious effort to learn the facts about the nation's No. 2 killer.

Matschek said volunteers will attempt to contact every person in the state during the crusade, but urged persons who are missed to mail their contributions to Cancer, care of their local postmaster.
