His Footprints

By HELEN SHERMAN

"Lives of great men leave behind them Footprints . . . on the sand of time."

Although by some standards my dear companion for 29 years, Wes Sherman, may not have achieved greatness in a wide variety of walks of life, but to me and his family, he will always be remembered as "the greatest". One could never ask for a more devoted man - to his wife, his children, his mother, all relatives and friends; to his church; to the highest ideals of work, whether it be as a journalist, as a student, as a teacher, or as a member or officer in an organization.

I think Wes has left many worthwhile "footprints" in his beloved Morrow county, and many of us are proud to have been in any way a part of them. One might say that we polished his shoes, but he did the walking in them, laid the path, and filled them very well.

How he loved to walk the sandy land, the productive soil, the wooded hills, even the busy sidewalks of Heppner, and around the vast ranch lands of Morrow county. He never felt he could praise the people highly enough for their ambition and perseverance, their desires to achieve greater things, their keen interests in state and national problems. He enjoyed very much being a "chamber of commerce" for the whole of Morrow county.

On the trip east he took along a dozen or more copies of the beautiful Oregon brochure and some of Morrow county to share and show to others across the nation the beauties of Oregon. He was a very proud Oregonian, and the crowded, smoggy areas of the east which we visited convinced him even more that he loved being one of its citizens.

It is very difficult to fill another's shoes, especially when it comes to that of an editor and publisher of a weekly newspaper. We may find it more than we can do.

The recent awards received for outstanding jorunalism work were known by Wes before the trip east, but he did not know definitely what they would be. They will forever be a tribute to his last productive year as an editor, and would make him very proud. They are testimony that dedicated work and the striving for excellence were a part of his nature, and to be rewarded.

An editorial page has a way of providing the "heart" for small newspaper, and many will share with me the feeling that Wes put forth that desired "pulse beat". He rarely had an editorial in print that was not first read by others for approval or disapproval, but never lacked the courage to say what he really felt "in his heart" to be the best for Morrow county and its people. He reached a common touch with others through his perhe was rarely satisfied with it, but we know it was enjoyed sonal "chaff and chatter" column. and held in first priority by many readers. Under pressure, his busy fingers would be glued to the typewriter many an early morning hour, preparing to meet the weekly deadline.

These words of tribute would be incomplete without giving appreciation to those who have done veteran work behind the scenes during the past three weeks. To Kit, who accepted the "reins" almost overnight and has done a superb job; to Gail on whom we have leaned heavily; to Rachel and her great capabilities; to Arnold and Reggie and Dale for their added burdens and tireless and energetic work in the shopto these we are indebted. Many hands are busy for many hours before meeting the post office deadline.

Our sincerest thanks, too, to the many, many friends throughout this area and around the state who have showered us with kind words and acts of understanding. We wish it were possible to shake the hand of each one personally.

Among memorial contributions are those going into a scholarship fund for a journalism student from the county. Many knew that Wes' fondest dream was to see young people become interested in journalism, and whenever possible worked with them to get them into the journalism fields. Other memorials have been gratefully accepted and will be placed in use.

To all the fine people who have felt a close touch with Wes through the years and have expressed it at this time of our sorrow, we shall forever be grateful. His wish, as is our wish, is to see this vast land, this happy land, this bountiful land, forever grow and prosper.

Fish Impoundments

Officials of the State Game Commission have told Morrow county Judge Paul Jones that work on Kelly and Penland Prairie projects has not been slated for this biennium because there has been little response from local people about their feelings on the project.

Since that has been made known by the judge, both the Heppner-Morrow county Chamber of Commerce and the Heppner City Council have passed resolutions to be sent to the Game Commission supporting the projects, and encouraging the Game Commission and the United States Forest Service to work cooperatively on the projects.

The impact of either or both projects would be tremendous on not only Heppner but also the entire county. Dollarwise, the economic growth of the area may soar by a half-million dollars. If public response is what is needed to get these two worthwhile endeavors off the ground, there should not be any lack of it in Heppner.

Now is the time to let the two government agencies know that Morrow county is indeed interested in Kelly and Penland Prairies. All it takes is a letter. -ka

There is a small stream which flows down Donaldson canyon the year around, only this year it seems it got out of bounds. There is a Shobe canyon out in the hills but this carries no water unless from heavy rains or a cloudburst. There is no Shobe creek. Miss Potter Named Shobe creek. It made my stay in Heppner very pleasant, in fact I was sorry to have it end so soon.
