U. N. Tour Students Compete in Contests

The special bus which carried winning student delegates to the United Nations on this year's Odd Fellow and Rebekah-sponsored Pilgrimage "Tour 21" must have had unusually talented speakers, as there were 7 of the 12 finalists competing for national honors in a speech contest held in New York City on July 24.

The boy and girl from Idaho won first place. Mona Williamson of Joseph High school, a representative from this area, was one of five finalists from the Oregon delegation. This information was relayed to Mrs. Altha Kirk of Sans Souci lodge, who is a state committee member of the U. N. Pilgrimage for Youth.

A glimpse of the tour was relayed through an August 12 letter to the East Oregonian written by Ralph Thorstad, a Umatilla High student who was first place winner from Area 16.

For next year's tour the different areas may put in a request for two seats on the bus if funds permit, Mrs. Kirk reports.

Mrs. Darrar of Madras is a past president of the Rebekah Assembly of Oregon, and at present serves on the joint youth committee of Oregon.

Pioneer is Queen Of Picnic Celebration

Mrs. Jim (Mildred) Evans was this year's queen of the Eastern Oregon Pioneer Picnic held July 20 at the Julia Henderson Park in Wheeler county. She is the mother of Verne E. Evans of Heppner.

Lloyd Evans, son of Mrs. Evans, escorted her to her seat of honor. Her granddaughter, Christine Evans, was crown bearer and her great granddaughter, Roberta Acock, crowned her.

Introducing her was her oldest son, Roy Evans. Marjorie Acock, a granddaughter of the queen, read a history of her life. Mrs. Evans was born January 18, 1885, at Waterloo, Iowa. She married Jim Evans at Bloomfield, Okla., on March 28, 1902, and for 18 months the newly married couple lived in a sod cabin as homesteaders.

In October of 1903 they left to come to Oregon, where Mr. Evans' mother and step-father, Mr. and Mrs. John Stuart, lived on a ranch near Fossil. After traveling three days and three nights by train to Arlington, they went to Fossil by stagecoach.

The couple worked in Oregon after that and eventually bought a farm on Pine Ridge. In 1950 they retired and moved to Clackamas and later on, to Condon.

Family members honored the couple early this spring with a 67th wedding anniversary get-together.

At the pioneer celebration two great granddaughters, Kellie Blunk and Kathleen Evans, were flower girls. Mrs. Evans' daughter, Margaret Thompson, and daughter-in-law, Roberta Evans, were her attendants.

Families who attended were Mr. and Mrs. Dean Acock, Scott, Steve and Roberta of Irrigon, Mr. and Mrs. Vern K. Evans, Kathleen, Erin, Mari, Angie, and Ann Marie of Irrigon, Mrs. Margaret Thompson, Sharon and Kathy of Clackamas, Roy Evans of Portland, Harold Evans of Colton, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Evans of Condon, Mr. and Mrs. Ken Evans and Gibb of Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Vern E. Evans and Mrs. Bill Evans of Fossil.

Bulletins Available Which Give Revised Processing Material

Now that the food preservation season is in full swing, Home Extension Agent Molly Saul invites homemakers to go to the Heppner Extension office to secure new and recently revised bulletins on canning, freezing, jam and jelly making, and pickling. These free bulletins give up-to-date information on techniques, procedures and storage, based on research done either at Oregon State University or the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mrs. Saul also reminds homemakers that if canning fresh vegetables is on the summer agenda, now is the time to get pressure canners in tip-top shape.

She says that first, one should review the directions that came with the canner. If they've been lost, write the manufacturer for a new set. Give the model number and approximate age of your canner. If you didn't know these, describe it as best you can.

Next give the canner a test run. Put water in the canner and bring to a boil in the usual way. Watch for steam leaks. If steam escapes around the cover, examine the sealing edges of the canner and cover. If it isn't clean, clean it with fine cleansing powder. A gasket that is worn, stretched, or hardened should be replaced.

If the pressure gauge has not been tested for a few years, it would be advisable to have it done now, states Mrs. Saul. Gauges that measure inaccurately may cause incorrect processing times, which in turn could mean spoilage and possible botulism contamination.

The local county extension office has the information on name and address where pressure gauges may be sent, and approximate costs. Telephone or write for this information, or contact Mrs. Saul in the Pendleton Extension Office, County Courthouse.

Port Member Attends Hearing in Portland

Oscar Peterson gained considerable information on federal water resource projects when he represented the Morrow County Port Commission at the public hearing of the Federal Water Resources Commission in Portland August 11.

Principal speaker was H. Calvert Anderson, executive vice-president of the Inland Empire Waterways Association. He requested modernization of the formula for economic evaluation of federally financed water development projects, pointing out that these are the only type of developments required to present a strictly defined cost-to-benefit ratio when under consideration for federal appropriations. Ironically, he contended, water resource projects are the only federal development projects that repay, with interest, a high percentage of the federal funds invested.

At least 20 testimonies were heard on behalf of ports, industries, private and public power companies and others through-out Oregon, Washington and Idaho, urging broadening the base on which the benefits of water resource developments are computed. Too much consideration is given to dollar values in the economic field, without consideration for environmental factors, protection of life, recreation and similar factors, it was pointed out during the hearing.

Youth Face Problem Of Learning Values In Today's Spending

Affluent teenagers are not getting the guidance they need to manage their money successfully, say two visiting professors at Oregon State University.

Florida Loyd, an Ohio State University home management professor, and Dr. Rose Mary Bengel, home economics education professor from Pennsylvania State University, made this assessment to an OSU consumer credit workshop for high school and junior college teachers.

While teenagers are spending more than $11 billion annually, say the home economists, they don't necessarily learn to handle their money in a way that will help them to meet the kinds of problems they will face as adults.

"They own cars. They have their own charge accounts. They buy radios, stereos, cosmetics, with parents buying the necessities."

"When they marry, they want to start out where their parents left off. They charge and over-charge, without knowing the effect it will have upon them in their later life," charges Dr. Bengel.

In the past, say the home economics professors, consumer education focused on buying food, clothing and other goods. These programs emphasized quality and budgeting to save for the big items.

Now the approach is teaching an awareness of the difference between needs and wants, and how individual value systems and attitudes influence buying habits.

Workshop participants will spend one class session listening to proceedings of a bankruptcy case to better see where unwise use of credit sometimes leads families.

Sue Wheelhouse To Help Youth In Costa Rica

Mary Susan Wheelhouse, Olex, 21, has completed five weeks training in San Jose, Costa Rica, for the 4-H Youth Development Project, conducted by the National 4-H Club Foundation.

Sue, who received her bachelor of science degree in home economics education in June, has been assigned to Costa Rica for a year to help set up 4-S clubs, similar to 4-H in the United States.

She is the sister of Jay Wheelhouse, Heppner.

"I hope this year will give me a greater understanding of the problems of the Central American people and the advancements they have made," she said.

In organizing 4-S clubs Sue will draw on her 10 years experience in 4-H. During that time she had clothing, knitting, beef and sheep projects and served as a junior leader.

"Another thing that will help me is the experience of working with a beef club at the Children's Farm Home near Corvallis," Sue said. When she was a freshman in college she helped the children raise steers. "It was a real challenge, and I learned a lot about how to relate to kids," she said.

Sue is especially interested in working with 4-H nutrition projects. "This is my field," she said. "I hope I can contribute in this way."

Nine young people from all over the United States are participating in the project, a part of the International Farm Youth Exchange.

Sue's program is sponsored by Geigy Chemical Corp., and by friends of 4-H in Oregon. The National 4-H Club Foundation conducts the program in behalf of the Cooperative Extension Service.
