Small Game Bird Season to Open

Oregon scattergunners are reminded that the general season for chukar and Hungarian partridge will open one-half hour before sunrise Saturday, October 4. A long gunning season lies ahead for the taking of these upland game birds, with Huns and chukars on the shooting agenda through December 31.

Bag limit is eight birds daily in the aggregate, 16 in possession. Hunters are reminded that the feathered head must remain attached to all upland game birds while in the field or in transit.

Biologists expect a good chukar season this fall but only fair at best for Hungarians. Although winter mortality took some adult birds, production this spring and summer is reported excellent.

Best gunning is expected in the Deschutes and John Day canyons; the breaks of the Powder, Burnt, and Imnaha; the Snake River canyons; and drainages of the Malheur and Owyhee. The east slopes of the Steens are expected good, but elsewhere through Harney and Lake counties hunting will be spotty.

The winner of the Liar's Contest gave the shortest speech of all. After the runner-up gave out with a big fish story, the winner simply said, "I believe every word of it."

Oregon Wildlife To Give Awards

Nine winners of awards in the fourth annual Oregon Conservation Achievement Program have been chosen by a panel of recognized authorities on conservation and the management of Oregon's natural resources and will be honored at the Achievement Program dinner to be held at the Imperial Hotel in Portland on October 18. Ranny Rancourt, awards chairman for the Oregon Wildlife Federation, announced today.

Judges who selected the winners from a strong list of nominations were Les Zumwalt, assistant director of the Oregon State Game Commission; Jack Remington, recreation development supervisor for Pacific Power and Light; and Allan Kelly, past state president of the Oregon Division Izaak Walton League and until recently a national vice president in the Izaak Walton League.

The dinner will climax the 1969 statewide program conducted by the Oregon Wildlife Federation in cooperation with the National Wildlife Federation and sponsored by the Sears-Roebuck Foundation. It is intended to select and honor persons and organizations for their outstanding contributions to the wise use and management of Oregon's natural resources — soils, waters, forests, and wildlife.

Governor Tom McCall will present the trophies which consist of unique replicas of symbolic wildlife species. The Governor's Award will go to the State Conservator of the Year.

15,000 Students, New Degrees Mark OSU Fall Opening

An estimated 15,000 students are expected in Corvallis later this month when opening of classes at Oregon State University marks the beginning of the university's second century.

The anticipated enrollment compares with 14,500 a year ago and reflects in-state and out-of-state tuition increases approved by the state legislature, according to Wallace E. Gibbs, university registrar.

One of the biggest changes at OSU this fall, said Gibbs, will be computer-assisted registration—the first such system for any college or university within the Oregon State System of Higher Education.

University officials explain that the computer-assisted program will efficiently aid students in organizing their class schedules and is expected to reduce much of the paper work for students, speed registration procedures and provide the fairest registration system possible.

Ten new degree programs will be started this fall at OSU including bachelor degree offerings in technical journalism, metallurgical engineering, Russian, religious studies and American studies.

New master's degree programs will be offered in atmospheric sciences, ocean engineering and metallurgical engineering as well as doctorate programs in atmospheric sciences and metallurgical engineering.
