New Wheat Named 'Twin'

A new semi-dwarf soft white spring wheat named Twin has been released by the agricultural experiment stations of Oregon, Washington and Idaho and the Crops Research Division of the USDA Agricultural Research Service.

The new variety was developed by Dr. Donald Sunderman, USDA research agronomist at the University of Idaho's Aberdeen branch experiment station.

"Twin is resistant to the prevalent races of stripe and stem rust but is susceptible to leaf rust and powdery mildew," said Dr. Warren E. Kronstad, OSU wheat breeder.

"Under irrigation it has averaged 17 bushels per acre higher in yield than Lemhi 66."

An awless wheat of medium maturity, the new variety is white-glumed and has moderately stiff straw.

At the Malheur Experiment Station in Ontario, 360 pounds of breeder's seed is being cultivated. Seed will be available next spring through the Oregon State Foundation Seed Project.

Krebs Sheep Still in Oregon

The time is fast approaching that the Krebs Brothers will have to decide when to go to Montana. Sometimes it is a toss-up whether to stay here and feed the sheep on sagebrush or take them to Montana to eat snowballs. This year with Jane, the first of the Henry Krebs' children to graduate, they are stalling as late as they can and hopefully until after the May 22 Commencement of Ione High School. May 15 is their usual shipping date.

They report very good lambing for this 1971 season. They had a good percentage of twins and the weather was excellent. Sheep are out on the range now with coyotes taking their toll daily.

Oregon State Senate

KEN JERNSTEDT

FARM AND RANCH BILLS RECEIVE NOTICE . . . Oregon's second largest industry, agriculture, came in for extra attention in the Senate last week, with the introduction and hearing of several farm and ranch oriented bills.

SB 677, introduced by the Senate Agriculture Committee at the request of several agricultural organizations, is the industry's answer to many of the pressing problems facing farmers today in the area of farm labor. The bill creates the Oregon Agricultural Labor Relations Board, consisting of three persons appointed by the Governor, whose function it is to act as a fact-finder, mediator and negotiator in farm labor disputes.

The bill recognizes "that agriculture has historically provided a source of employment for youth which is essential to the living environment of the state." It also declares its state policy that "agricultural employees are entitled to the right to organize and bargain collectively, or to refrain from doing so."

Other aspects of the bill provide for injunctive procedures in a labor dispute involving agricultural commodities, and the specific exclusion of young people under 16 years from the terms of the act. As you know, a bill now in the Senate puts all minors under the Minimum Wage act, which, in effect, would stop the thousands of Oregon school children from picking berries and beans each year. Contrary to the recently circulated report, these children are not being exploited by the "mean old farmer," nor are they being pulled out of school to pick in the fields. The charges made to that effect were totally misleading.

Farm site picketing would still be allowed, as it is under present law; a picketer, however, must have worked for the farmer he is picketing for at least six days before the beginning of the strike. This clause eliminates professional picketers.

A bill dealing with cattle brand inspection caused all sorts of turmoil in its public hearing last week, because the cattle industry itself seemed to be split right down the middle on the bill.

Proponents of the bill, which calls for a brand inspection at each change of ownership of the animal, claim this will cut down on cattle theft, a particularly serious and, unfortunately, growing problem in the state today.

Opponents, on the other hand, claim that change-of-ownership brand inspection is too expensive, too inefficient, and extremely impractical. And, beyond that, they don't think that brand inspection will really have that much effect on cattle theft in Oregon.

Under present law, brands must be inspected when cattle go to slaughter, out of state or to a livestock auction market. The new bill says that all branded cattle must be inspected every time there is a change in ownership, and unbranded cattle when they enter a feed lot operation.

Unless the industry can get closer together on this bill, I'm afraid it doesn't have much of a chance for passage.

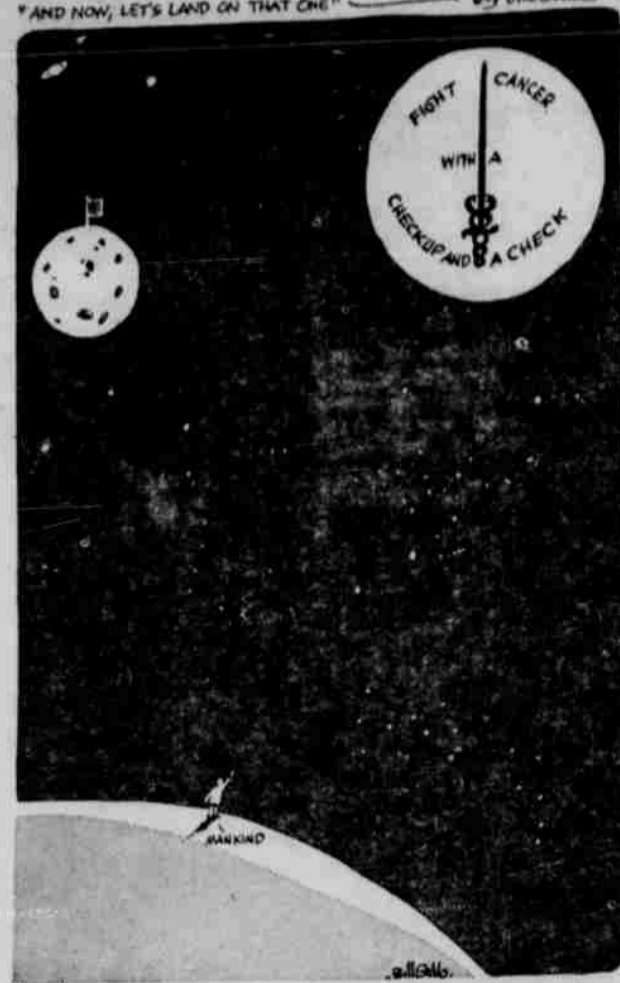

18-YEAR-OLD ADULTS . . . The legal age of majority is constantly being tested in Oregon and across the nation, the most recent example of which is the U. S. Supreme Court decision on the 18-year-olds' right to vote.

Four bills have been introduced in the Senate which reduce the age of majority from 21 to 18 in separate areas where age is a prime consideration: (1) the purchase of alcoholic beverages and the right to be on the premises where they are sold; (2) the right to enter into contracts; (3) the right to serve on a jury; (4) the right to marry without parental consent.

These bills have been heard by the Senate Judiciary Committee and should be acted upon within a few days.

As each house begins to hear bills from its opposite chamber, more and different testimony will be presented. By the same token, I am still interested in getting your thoughts and comments on legislation yet to be acted on—in either the Senate or House. Please write to: Ken Jernstedt, Senate Chamber, Salem, Oregon 97310.
