

War -- Past, Present and Future Confronted on Eastern Tour

Pat Brindle, unknowingly and unintentionally came face-to-face with the aspects of war during her recent 18-day stay in the East.

What was intended as a family visit to greet the arrival of a new granddaughter and to tour the various points of interest resulted in an interesting, fast-paced and somewhat disillusioning experience.

Mrs. Brindle stayed with her son-in-law and daughter, Capt. and Mrs. Lonnie Myers and their daughters at Quantico Marine Base in Virginia. Capt. Myers is in Amphibious Warfare training and upon completion will be stationed in Okinawa for a year. Jacquie, his wife will move her family back to Oregon during this time.

Mrs. Brindle's third granddaughter, Gabrielle Lynn arrived May 1 to join Amy Beth 3, and Nichole, 2.

War of the past was exhibited throughout the various museums visited in Virginia displaying relics of the Civil War. Historic landmarks dotted the Fredericksburg and Manassas Battle grounds commemorating the century-old conflict. The tour of Mary Washington's home recalls the Revolution as his mother's residence was where George Washington resided before he took office as the nation's first president.

Impressed with the lovely landscape and dense vegetation, Mrs. Brindle observed the maple, oak and tulip trees and the fragrant blooming dogwood and cherry trees as she toured the area. The Arlington Cemetery was among the most notable tours with the changing of the guard and the Grave of the Unknown Soldier from World War I. The constantly visited graves of Robert and John Kennedy brings to mind yet another war, the war of the present — the Vietnam war.

The effects of this war and the movements resulting were dramatically illustrated as Mrs. Brindle toured Washington, D. C. on April 23. Her disillusionment stemmed from the activities as thousands of war protesters arrived for the May Day Anti-War Demonstration.

If the protest was for peace, Mrs. Brindle observed this was not the tempo of activity displayed by the participants. The lack of respect for a nation's heritage was regrettably made clear by the complete disorder — garbage and litter were strewn everywhere, property was destroyed, public offices forcibly occupied, fences and benches were burned, vehicles were abandoned and tires slashed.

Ecology movement slogans were ignored as barrels of garbage were hurled into crowds which Mrs. Brindle observed was too much for the sanitation department who attempted clean-up. Benches around the Washington Monument were uprooted and burned. Therefore, most landmarks were closed to the public during this time.

All this completely discouraged Mrs. Brindle from a return trip to the nation's capitol. She had observed the activities of only a partial number of the thousands which were to arrive for the demonstration, intent on stopping the functioning of the government.

Future
A thought-provoking "demonstration" of another sort served as a blatant reminder of war, new graduates of the armed services training programs face in their future.

This demonstration, appropriately called "Mad Moments" is put on each year by the graduating Marine Lieutenants at Quantico. A battle sponsored by the American Ordnance Ammunition Company is simulated using live ammo.

Mrs. Brindle along with approximately 1000 spectators was required to wear helmets and forbidden to leave the stands during the two-hour, nighttime program.

The area becomes a battle front with the Marines firing flares and rifles; napalm bombs exploded; tanks, fighter jets and medic helicopters used. The entire operation is narrated and the communications between foxholes is broadcast leaving the audience feeling as if they had actually been through a battle.

When recounting her experiences, Mrs. Brindle commented she would like to return to the nation's capitol, but NOT during a war-demonstration.
