

Spin and Dye -- New Found Hobby!

If you didn't get a chance to stop by and watch Mrs. Leland Hardy operate her spinning wheel at the County Fair last week you missed one of the highlights of the Fair. Mrs. Hardy, the former Patricia Peck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Peck, has made some astounding discoveries in her vegetable dyeing efforts that led to her exciting new hobby.

She first made the acquaintances of several charming older ladies who enjoyed this pastime. From them she learned how to vegetable dye yarns. The black lichens on the rocks in eastern Oregon are treated in an ammonia solution. The longer they are soaked, the pinker they dye the yarn. Onion skins will dye it orange, rhododendrons a lovely dark green; purple fuchsias, a green; beets a disappointing yellow; rose hips, beige; golden rod beautiful yellow; camas roots, purple.

She tries many kinds of leaves, roots and flowers to get the colors she wants.

The yarn is first washed and boiled. She says it is safe to boil the yarn if you don't change the water temperature. It must be treated to a Morand process so that it will accept the dye.

As she dyed, her interest grew in spinning. Her hand-some spinning wheel came as a kit from New Zealand. She assembled and refinished the spinning wheel herself. She has only been operating it for about three months. But operate it she did. As she pinched off the wool and strung it into the mahine, she visited with friends who stopped by to watch. She says she does it by feel and not by looking.

She takes it off the spindle into skeins which are then ready to be washed and dyed. She buys the raw wool. She enlists the aid of her daughters Tami and Danita in picking and carding. This eliminates the cockleburrs from the wool.

She has many opportunities to sell her dyed balls of yarn but she is going to make a room size rug for herself. The draperies in her home are a Williamsburg reproduction. The rug whether she knits, chochets or hooks it, will be in the same browns, golds or greens.

DRESSED IN THE fashion of early American spinning days, Mrs. Leland Hardy spins away at a hobby that is fast gaining popularity in today's world. First the wool is picked, daughter Tami center and then it is carded, Danita, left. Theirs was a Blue Ribbon booth.

She says the black fleeces with white in it can be dyed for beautiful heathers.

Mrs. Hardy graduated from Oregon State in Home Ec. She says she always liked chemistry but this is "a thousand times more fun". The family now lives at Jefferson.

Daughter Takes Heirloom Pieces

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Foster, Ross, Johnny and Reta of Klamath Falls were here last week visiting her folks, Mr. and Mrs. Phil Higgins. Phil is selling his home and moving to the Nursing Home with Mrs. Higgins.

Mrs. Foster took with her three marble topped pieces of bedroom furniture that had been in the family for years and years.

To The Steens

Mr. and Mrs. Merle Cantin and Pamela vacationed at the Steens recently. They visited their friends, Marvin Barrington on the White Horse Ranch east side of the Steens.

They fished in the creeks, hunted arrow heads. They found five perfects. It was the first time there has been water in Little Alford Lake after June 1. There was about 8" of water and everything was green.
