A Visit To The John Leach's 'Sleepy Hollow' Is A Must

Unbelievable in the midst of Portland's urban sprawl is Sleepy Hollow, a five acre forest garden on the banks of John son Creek.

John and Lilla Leach are the heart of Sleepy Hollow. John, a 90-year old gentleman full of stories and humor guided members of Lone Garden Club and guests on a delightful tour of the cottage and its treasury of furnishings and over the miles of trails through gardens and forests of plants collected during the Leaches many years of world travel.

The unusual floor of their cottage is wide planks of oak with walnut disks inlaid over the nails, all beautifully finished. In the parlor a solid rosewood square grand piano, which came to Oregon around Cape Horn, is only one of many items of historical as well as aesthetic interest. Beside the piano is a desk made from a melodeon belonging at one time to Mr. Jacob Johnson of Oregon's earliest days, for whom Johnson Creek is named.

Mrs. Leach, at one time a botany teacher, now confined to a wheel chair sits in a pleasant room with a large window looking out on what John calls the welfare center for hundreds of birds. On the wide window sill catching the light is beautifully arranged a display of Lilla's one hundred piece collection of amber glassware: pitchers, cake plates, vases, bowls, cups, and several "golden Slippers" of different designs.

Here and there are fine articles of metal artwork done by Mr. Leach: candlesticks, tea-warming table, plates, trays and many other items.

The mile long trail through Sleepy Hollow's five acres crosses Johnson Creek twice, once over a suspension bridge and later back across stepping stones in a most picturesque pool setting. Across the suspension bridge from the cottage Mr. Leach has created a unique picnic site with stone fireplace, concrete patio, table and chairs cut from large tree stumps. Here the tour took time to enjoy a potluck luncheon.

Hundreds of varieties of ground covers have been established along the trails among trees and shrubs from many lands. Numerous varieties of native iris were in bloom and petals from the interesting dove tree, import from the Orient, were falling.

Special interest spots are scattered along the trail such as a rustic cabin with a colorful terrazzo floor its dominating feature. The design is a fruit tree with the names John and Lilla inlaid beside its trunk. All other features of the cabin are antique or unique such as a chair made from a whale vertebrae or the eight inch long cut at both ends by beaver. The stump which served as an altar for the outdoor wedding of the Leaches, has been moved to a special spot along the trail. The trail winds through both formal and informal collections such as the rose trail, the physic trail, rhododendron garden, a Japanese garden, a fountain garden, dogwood and many others. Yet one section has been left in its natural state. Here is the remains of an old still that did illegal business during prohibition.

Of prime interest were the blooms of ginger plants and the large tricolor beech which forms a magnificent canopy for one of the cottage terraces.

It isn't too soon to start planning toward the next tour of Sleepy Hollow.

Mr. Leach especially enjoys seeing those with whom he was acquainted during the years he lived on a ranch on Blackhorse near Lexington.

Former members of Ione Garden Club, Nadine Johnson, Salem and June Christopherson, Donald, residents of Heppner area, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Gemmeil, Salem, joined those who drove from Morrow County for the tour: Mary Doherty, Norma Lee, Leila Palmer, Laura Holtz, Rhea Hubbard, Delta Huber, Geneva Palmer, Friends of Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. E. R. Anderson of Sandy and her daughter Mrs. Roy Dundas, Jr., were part of the group also.

A Reminder To Christians
Pastor Don W. Johnson wants to remind his flocks at Heppner and Lexington that their new hours are in effect this Sunday. At Heppner the Morning Worship is at 9:30 and Bible School at 10:45; at Lexington Bible School is at 10:00 and Morning Worship at 11:00. Evening services will be combined at the Heppner Church, (Junior High and Senior High) 6:30 and Evening Worship at 7:30.
