It's A Big District . . . But

When Dave Green was over to speak to the Heppner-Morrow County Chamber of Commerce, he explained the simillarities of his district.

In spite of the fact that this new district includes all and part of eight counties, there are many similarities throughout. The district as drawn out by the Secretary of State, extends from the western boundary of Umatilla County across to the eastern portions of Marion, Linn and Clackamas counties,

Throughout it is rural. The major industries are agriculture, lumber and recreation probably in that order. There are no big employers. The largest is the Madras School District which employs 248 people. There are only small towns with no one big town that could swing an issue. The largest town is Madras with a population of 1699.

He feels that ecology will be important. Already the people of this area are finding how the Rivers bill is affecting them and how they can be restricted in doing things on their own land without conferring with the Highway Commission.

Another important problem in this district he noted was chool financing. He said that in the Madras area where transmission lines and pipe lines pay a big share of the school bill, the land owners have not been hit as hard as in other areas of this district.

Because of these many similarities, the district may pull together more than would have been believed at first glance.
