senior citizens are 10% of Oregon population

Oregonians, like much of the nation, have been slow to recognize the positive contributions senior citizens can and do make to society and to recognize the special needs of older citizens as a group.

However, this is changing as more communities recognize the needs and take steps to meet them. The White House Conference on Aging and the increasing willingness of the senior citizen to speak out are among the factors creating an awareness throughout society.

The 1970 Census of Population and Housing places 10.8 per cent of Oregon's population in the 65 and over bracket, slightly higher than the national average which is just under 10 per cent.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

Young people in Morrow County will be able to have the aid of the Extension Office Employment Service in looking for work this summer, announces George Johnston, County Extension Agent, with the help of the schools, students are signing up to get jobs when an employer call the Extension Office.

Anyone interested in hiring a young person for any kind of work, temporary or seasonal, can call Lenna Smith at the Morrow County Extension office, 676-9642. Types of work listed on the Youth Employment card include farm work, yard work, house work, and business work. If there is a need for a babysitter, lawn mowed, hay hauling, typing, waitress, or other odd jobs, there will be young people willing to do this work on file.

Most students have had the information on the service given to them in school. However, if there are any students who have not as yet signed up for this service, come in and fill out a card.

In North Morrow County, Shirley Zielinski at Boardman City Hall, has volunteered to work with the Youth Employment Service. Students at Riverside High School have been given information and some have already signed up. If there are any further questions, please contact the Extension office.

out that between 1960 and 1970, the older population grew faster than the young, that the oldest part of the older population grew faster than the younger part, and that the percentage of women is increasing faster than men. AOA officials expect these trends to continue.

The OSU Extension Service is concerned not only with helping meet the needs of senior citizens, often called "the fast growing minority," but also about the needs facing those about to retire. "One of the basic problems is that many feel retirement is the end of living. They retire from a job rather than to a new way of life. They don't think of the time after retirement as bonus years when they are free to do what they want," says Miss Merle Seales, Oregon State University extension assistant state home economics leader and project leader for programs for older Americans.

The importance of pre-retirement programs is underscored by the fact that 9.9 per cent of Oregon's population falls between the ages of 55 and 64. Because of this, the OSU Extension Service has designed educational programs for both the senior citizen and for those about ready to retire.

The pre-retirement programs deal with attitudes toward a major change in life styles. Educational efforts take the form of pre-retirement workshops for couples and programs conducted through extension home economics study groups.

Subjects range from attitudes toward retirement to "Facts and Fallacies on Aging," "An Older Person in the Home" and an examination of the wife's role in her husband's retirement.

A series of bulletins and leaflets are available through county extension offices that directly deal with problems of concern to senior citizens. Among the publications are "Homes for Senior Citizens...A Check List," "Cooking for One," and "Always Attractive in Your Elderly Years."

In addition, many other publications, such as "Choosing a Mobile Home," and "Attitudes Toward Retirement," contain information dealing with decisions facing many couple either retired or about to retire.

Dietary habits of senior citizens have been a shared concern of the OSU Extension Service, State Division of Health, other educational and agency representatives, Oregon Nutrition Council and Oregon Dietetics Association.

Working together, the groups are providing nutrition information to senior centers for use in newsletters and bulletin board displays and are also conducting such educational programs as "Without a Spoon of Sugar" and "Without a Spoon of Salt" for persons who must limit the intake of sugar and salt in their diets, many of whom are senior citizens.

The 1972 Oregon Girls State will be limited to a select group of girls who will constitute a mythical state. They assume the duties of citizens by electing their own city, county, and state officials. They set up their own city and county government; they conduct court sessions, pass and enforce city ordinances. They elect their own State Senators and Representatives; and in their legislature, the girls introduce, debate and pass bills.
