

To State Youth Council

Bill Hisaw, a junior at Corvallis High School, will serve as president of the Oregon Youth Council for the coming year, reports Don Stangel, 4-H Youth Development Extension Agent, serving as an advisor to the Morrow County Youth Council.

The council is composed of representatives from county councils and serves in an advisory capacity to the Governor's Commission on Youth.

The OSU Extension Service has been given the responsibility for organizing and advising the councils by the Governor's Commission. Currently 15 counties have organized youth councils.

One of the first projects facing the new state council is conducting a survey of the attitude of young people toward Oregon's laws concerning marijuana. The study is to be completed by June 1 for submission to the Governor's Commission which is currently considering a position statement on marijuana.

Other state-wide activities planned for the coming year include a leadership development workshop at OSU in the fall and a state-wide youth conference on the Corvallis campus next spring. The conference will deal with a subject important to youth, Stangel said.

The state council structure has been changed to provide for four regional vice presidents who are expected to conduct programs in their respective areas.

Hisaw, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hisaw, Corvallis, is a past president of the Benton County Youth Council. He is in his ninth year of 4-H work and serves as a junior leader for a livestock club.

Jim Cutsforth, Lexington is the new vice president for Region 4, Northeast Oregon, and Norman Palmer, Junior at South Albany High School for Region 1, Northwest Oregon. The other two vice presidents have yet to be selected.

Miss Bennett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Don Bennett, Heppner, is a sophomore at Heppner High School, where she is a class officer and participates in Girl's sports.

David Warren, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Warren of Ione, is a Junior at Ione High where he is active in athletics and other school activities.
