

Construction at Kinzua, with all types of equipment working. Here workmen are pouring concrete in the first phase of the new plywood plant.

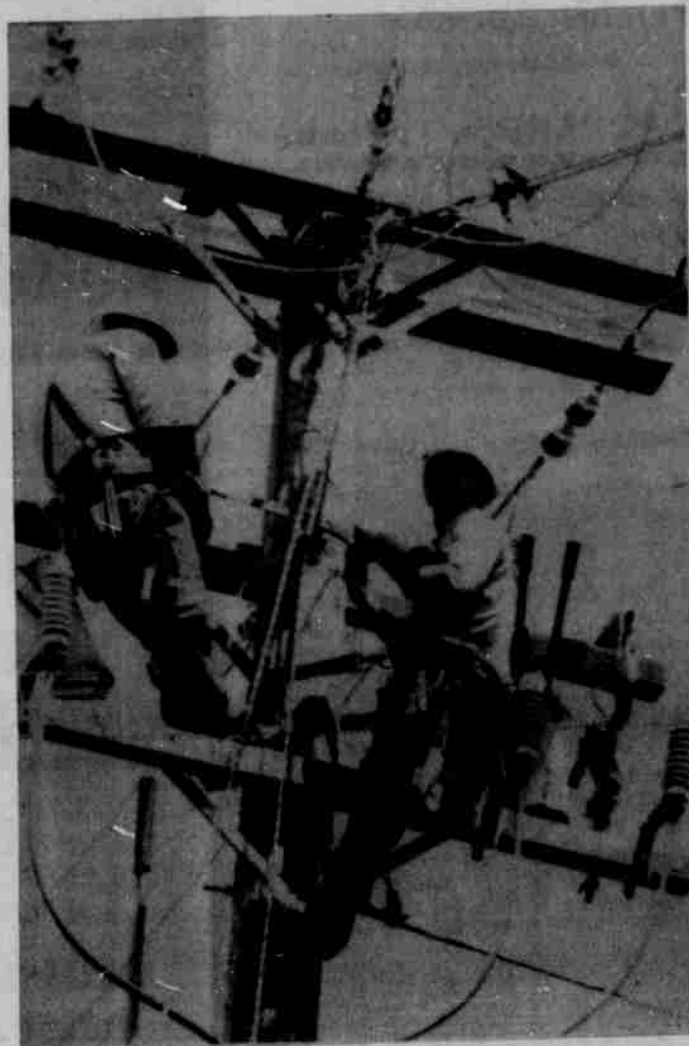

Although Kinzua Corporation closed down for two weeks, it was a time when everyone else worked. Here workmen relocate the existing railroad tracks in order to gain clearance.

Columbia does fast job .....

This portable boom is used by the Kinzua Corporation for various tasks. Here the boom is being used to remove the concrete forms from a newly poured retaining wall.

Vern Wilson and Ed Struthers, Columbia Basin employees, are making final ties into a hot line to serve Kinzua Corporation with a new 1,550 kva transformer which will serve the new plywood mill.

putting power to Kinzua

Mike Oreskovic, Kinzua plywood manager, and contractor Doug Kirk, head for Mike's office to check over some plans.
