Conservation and Curtailment of Energy Encouraged by Columbia Basin Electric Co-op

Of the 2,100,000 homes in the Northwest about 31 per cent of them are electrically heated. The average electrically heated home uses about 14,000 kwh annually for heat. Reducing the setting on the thermostat just 2 degrees F. can result in about a 6.2 per cent saving. If all electrically heated homes would make this 2 degree change of setting, the annual savings would amount to more than 565 million kwhs. This exceeds this year's combined output of Detroit, Big Cliff, Dexter and Foster dams.

HOT TIP!

Keep your thermostat as low as comfort permits. Each degree over 70° adds about 3% to your annual heating bill; each degree below 70° saves about the same.

With the historical all-time low streamflow and storage, we at Columbia Basin stress the need for members to voluntarily conserve and curtail electric use by 10 per cent. This will allow saving water for a time when it will serve a critical load.
