

Mustangs' annual banquet

Football team honored

The second annual banquet honoring the Heppner High School football team was held Wednesday evening at the High School Cafeteria.

Dean Naffziger, acting as master of ceremonies, thanked parents and friends of the team members for their loyal support at all Mustang games. Recognition was also given to those persons "behind the scenes" for their efforts during the season.

JV Coach Dale Conklin was called to present awards to members of his team. "Although the boys did not finish among the top teams in the league, it was the experience of playing football which will help the varsity in the coming years," he said.

All of the JV team members were introduced and presented with certificates and a small letter for their sweaters.

Varsity Coach Chuck Starr, in praising his team, said, "Although the boys did not get to go to the state finals, they played a good game throughout the entire season."

The Mustangs finished their season with a 7 win and 2 loss record.

"Their loss to Pilot Rock and Condon will be remembered in future play," Starr said, but the knowledge gained in those two games spurred them on to win the final three games of the season. Team unity made this a successful season, which in turn provided us with a great satisfaction of working with the boys," Starr concluded.

The 13 senior members of the team were then introduced to the audience and each senior took a few moments to tell the audience what he thought of his past years as a team member and what he thought of the coaching staff.

Remarks such as, "I learned all about football from the coach after listening to him for 10 minutes" and "I really don't know how they put up with me during the past years" brought laughs from the crowd.

Plaques for outstanding performance were awarded to John Myers, Most Improved Player of the Year; Randy Morris, Outstanding Linebacker; Mike Bergstrom, Outstanding Backfield Player; and John Boyer, Most Valuable Player of the Year.

Named to the Columbia Basin Conference All-Star First Team were John Boyer and Randy Morris. Boyer, senior, playing his first season of football, had an unusual season. He was chosen among the top 10 in the State of Oregon in three categories, passing, punting and punt returns. Boyer was chosen all-conference offensive end, as well as all conference defensive halfback. Senior Randy Morris was chosen as the first teams all-conference center.

John Kilkenny, junior, was chosen guard on the second team offense, with Mike Bergstrom, senior, named as end on the defensive team. Junior Mike Mills was picked to fill the middle guard spot. Jerry Gentry, junior, was given honorable mention in the quarterback spot, and Ken Eckman was chosen as defensive halfback.

Project Omelette tests students' ingenuity

Even though it was a week late due to school closure, the Heppner 8th grade science students staged "Project Omelet," an egg launch.

The following account was submitted by one of the participants, Sheree Marquardt:

New ways to launch eggs were shown to the public for the first time on Tuesday, Nov. 13, at the rodeo arena in Heppner.

Fifty 8th grade students and their teacher, Mrs. Inez Meador, participated. Each student was responsible for his own project, to launch an egg at least 20 feet in the air without breaking the egg.

The students met with varying degrees of success. Some went up the the required height but broke the egg, while some didn't reach the required height but did not break the egg.

There were many different methods of launching. Some launchers were made of springs some worked on the sling-shot order, some worked on the bow-and-arrow method and some used a kite. But the most common was the teeter-totter method propelled either by jumping or dropping a heavy object, such as a rock, on the end.

Many methods of keeping the egg from breaking were employed. They were wrapped with foam, embedded in cotton, wrapped in tinfoil with padding, put inside rubber balls or placed inside a water bag, to name a few.

The most unique method of launching was rockets used by two boys. After being shot in the air, a parachute opened which was supposed to bring the egg safely to the ground. In the first case, this plan worked perfectly with the egg landing unbroken close to the spectators. However, the second rocket launching was not so successful as the parachute broke loose from the egg, allowing it to fall and smash.

The most laughs came when one boy brought out a pigeon and tied his egg to one of the pigeon's legs and a string to control the pigeon on the other leg. The pigeon flew to the required height, but the egg broke.

Rites Monday for Henry W. Krebs

Henry Walter Krebs, 79, died Nov. 17 at Hiersche's Nursing Home in Pendleton after an extended illness.

Funeral services were held Nov. 19 at the Methodist Church in Arlington.

Mr. Krebs is survived by his widow, Annie C.; a son, Henry R. Krebs, lone, a daughter, Carleen West, lone, six grandchildren; two brothers, John W. Krebs, Arlington, and George C. Krebs, Portland; two sisters, Margaret Hurst, Arlington, and Lena Sommerfeldt, Portland; and several nieces and nephews.

He was born in Troutdale, Ore., Jan. 6, 1894. He attended school in Helvetia, Ore. Before coming to Morrow County in 1915, he and his brothers helped their father operate a dairy ranch in Portland.

Mr. Krebs entered the Army from Heppner in 1918 and served in World War I. He was awarded the Purple Heart medal for wounds suffered in front line duty.

He was married to Annie C. Lowe, Sept. 11, 1925 in the Cecil Hall.

He engaged in a ranching operation with his brothers in the Krebs Brothers Ranch at Cecil, raising sheep. The men's sons were later included to form Krebs Bros. Inc.

Mr. Krebs was a member of Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 6094 in Arlington, and was a 49-year member of BPO

A tribute to Henry

By DOROTHY KREBS

Henry Krebs was a sheepman. Sheep were his occupation, hobby, concern, and love.

The Bible, in the book of John, describes a good shepherd as one who is willing to lay down his life for his sheep. Few are called upon to go to that extreme, but certainly everyone who calls himself a sheepman must be willing to make sacrifices.

Being a sheepman meant that Henry Krebs could not be at his wife's side when their daughter was born. It meant not ever being able to see his son play in a football game. It meant being absent when his children graduated from both grade and high school. There were many other things he had to give up because the sheep demanded his presence.

His family was taught that the welfare of the sheep had to come first on many occasions.

During his long illness, Henry never lost interest in the sheep. He kept close track of everything that concerned the sheep operation. As his body weakened, it became a source of amazement to his family how the mention of the sheep would bring a response from him. Two weeks ago, when his son told him he was going to bring the sheep from Montana to Oregon, Henry's hold on life was but a heartbeat. The sheep arrived on Tuesday and he was told the sheep were on the range on Wednesday. His heart grew weaker and on Saturday, he died.

Henry Krebs was a sheepman. To him, everything had to wait until the sheep were cared for, even death.

AVIATION FILM TO BE SHOWN NOV. 25

"Signposts Aloft," the latest in the Moody Institute of Science film series, will be shown Nov. 25, 6 p.m., at the Church of The Nazarene in Heppner.
