Wheeler County 'English taking their crises in stride'

"Conservation, Preservation and Population: The Economic and Other Values at Stake" will be the theme of a public meeting to be held at the Wheeler County Courthouse, Fossil, Saturday Feb. 23, 2:30 p.m.

The meeting is sponsored by the Wheeler County Historical Commission. A panel of speakers will broaden the subjects. Everyone is invited to attend and participate in the discussion. Coffee and cookies will be served.

The Wheeler County Planning Commission will hold its monthly meeting in Mitchell Community Hall, Mitchell, Wednesday, Feb. 20, 7:30 p.m. Everyone is invited to attend the meeting.

The Wheeler County Historical Commission will hold its meeting in Fossil, Feb. 21, 2:30 p.m. at the county courthouse. The public is invited to attend.

Guest speakers at the Chamber of Commerce meeting Monday were the Rev. and Mrs. David Blackaller, who spoke to the group about their recent visit to England.

"Our recent visit to London reminded my wife of the blackout days during World War II," said the Rev. Blackaller, "as every other street light is out, and there are no display signs in shop windows. The only difference is that during World War II all of the windows were equipped with black curtains to keep all of the light out of the street."

With the fuel and coal shortage many of the people who live in the outlying areas are staying away from the large cities, as they are in fear of returning home for many of the commuter trains are not running on a regular schedule, he said.

"We had no trouble with any of the trains we rode. However, our trips were of a longer nature and we did not have to ride the commuter trains," said the Rev. Blackaller. "Although trains were on strike their personnel was extremely polite. In one case they announced over the public address system that a train would be two minutes late."

One of the causes of the strikes and the three-day work week is the difference between the common market and the British market, he observed, and noted that the take home pay of a coal miner is about $80 per week and that of a postal worker about $40 per week.

"The government is trying to control the rise of income benefits, and is not making any deals with individual unions, while most of the leaders of unions are trying to change the parliamentary and democratic form of government now in existence in England."

About the only shortage they encountered in England was in toilet paper, with most commodities available if one wants to pay the price.

Mentioning some of the prices, the Rev. Blackaller said an Imperial gallon of gasoline costs $1.10, while a hotel room for two run $15-26 per day, which includes a full breakfast, not merely a continental one. The price differential depends largely on whether one wants a private bath in his room and hot rather than tepid water.

Many of the workers in England are on a three-day work week. Schools, hospital, and postal workers are still on the regular five-day week.

Many smaller offices and newspapers are operating from their homes rather than their offices, not only because of the lighting but because of the lack of heat in the offices.

"Although some of the people are disgruntled about the lack of lighting and the lack of heating fuels, most of them are taking the shortage in stride, and life continues at a new pace. Hopefully, their problems will soon come to an end," he said.

Ultrasonic big 'news' at Portland show

Lowell Gribble, Heppner, reported great interest was shown in his Ultrasonic Predictable Maintenance display booth at the Sawmill and Plywood Clinic at the Portland Coliseum, Feb. 13-16.

More than 1000 people from all over the world attended the clinic, sponsored by Miller Freeman Publications in conjunction with C.C. Crow Publications.

Gribble displayed UPM equipment used in detecting electrical and mechanical faults and air leaks. He showed photographs of and actual bearings and bearing races in all stages of deterioration which UPM had detected before failure in everything from paper mill machinery to water pumps.

As a result of the booth, Gribble has a list of prospective customers from as far away as Alaska and New Mexico. Interest in his service came from South America, Southern California, Montana and Canada, especially the British Columbia area.

Gribble's son, Stuart, is presently in Michigan and Wisconsin setting up two paper mills for regular inspection by UPM. The Gribbles plan to expand their operation into that area.

A terrarium taxes one's imagination

The indoor terrarium, a living entity trapped under glass, has unfortunately become a current fad.

Let not the disgusting capitalization upon the prevailing trend destroy your enjoyment of the magical quality of these miniature worlds. Yes, you can still create a fantasy world of your own that yet remains somewhat original: a dead garden.

All it takes is a box and a little insight into the beauty of things most people pass by: weeds, rocks, old bones—anything you'd usually detour running barefoot through a field.

For example, a piece of petrified wood that bends in a certain way can be made to hover over unsuspecting straw flowers. A volcanic rock full of tiny holes, can be made a showcase to other weeds or tiny stones. Sulphurized rocks can add a moon-like appearance. Spiny thistles can guard an old sun-bleached vertebrae.

The dead flowers, curious-looking stones, naked bones, parched earth, and other remnants of the living hold an eternal beauty only found with the aid of a little perception into the originality and possibilities of even the tiniest things.

The advantages? You needn't water it, the flowers won't wilt, and insects won't destroy it. Arrange it all according to your own fantasies and it doubles in use as home therapy. It can also be a nice place to plant a cactus. The effect is a sterile delicacy balancing on the ethereal. Most of all, it makes one realize that even the dead can be beautiful.

teacher. The aide will be retained for the remainder of the year if the enrollment of the class does not exceed 40 students, and will assist in other areas of the school as well.

Daniels reported that the Northwest Association of Secondary and Higher Schools has completed its evaluation of Riverside and Heppner High Schools. The Riverside school received a "fully approved" rating. Heppner High received "fully approved with comment." Comment was made on the inadequateness of the industrial arts shop facility and the lack of storage space and a media center in the high school library. Both problems are being studied by the long range planning committee.

The board adopted a school calendar for the 1974-75 school year. Accordingly, school will begin on Sept. 3 and end May 30.

In other business, the board adopted a policy stating the district's intent to pursue non-discriminatory hiring practices, in compliance with Senate Bill 555. In brief, the policy states that the board will hire persons without regard to race, color, religion, sex, age or national origin.
