Irrigon votes water bonds

The $14,000 water bond election May 30 in Irrigon passed, 41-8.

This will provide funds to construct at least a 100,000gallon reservoir, possibly a larger one Eleven additional fire hydrants will assure fire protection to the community, as well as larger water mains. A pump house will be constructed.

Irrigon residents were made aware of the need for municipal water system improvements on Friday morning. Early risers had no water between 5 a.m. and 6:30 a.m. One of the ailing pumps had failed to kick back on and the tank had drained. Mayor Chester Wilson became aware of the problem about 6 a.m. and switched on the standby pump. Things were running smoothly again by 7:45. It is felt by many that with the agricultural boom in the demand for city water, and already the water pressure is often low when residents are sprinkling yards. The present system has reached its capacity, but with the proposed improvements there will be room for expansion.

Visiting relatives and friends in Irrigon over the Memorial Day weekend were Jay Berry and Snow McCoy of Portland and Mr. and Mrs. Russel McCoy of Vancouver.
