Autograph party for teacher-poet

Saturday between 1 and 3 p.m., Lexington's teacher-poet Clifford A. Williams and Mrs. Williams will be honored at an autograph coffee arranged by the Bookworm Club at the Heppner Public Library.

"Falling Leaves," a collection of more than 40 of Williams' rhymes, was recently published and is dedicated to his wife, Frances. "Who really meant it when she said, 'For better or for worse'... and after times of separation during our lives together has always been me to come home to."

Some of Williams' writing is light and amusing; some is serious. These poems were written between 1943 and 1974 during the years the author completed his World War II Navy service in the Pacific, during his 17 years of work at the Bunker Hill Mining Co. in Kellogg before and after the war, during the following years of campus work which lead to his teaching in Idaho and Oregon, and during the years of teaching and operating his small farm at Lexington.

Williams finished high school at Lewiston, Idaho, and attended Lewiston Normal School. He continued training at Eastern Washington State College at Cheney and at the University of Kansas at Lawrence. His years of teaching have been at Whorley, Kings-ton, and Kellogg in Idaho and at Medford, Echo, Heppner and Ione and at the University of Kansas. He presently teaches the 6th grade at Ione. Mrs. Williams, who has also taught many years, is now teaching a 5th grade at Heppner Elementary School. Both of the Williams are well known in Morrow County.

Williams is a member of the Lexington City Council, a director of the Umatilla-Morrow School Employees Federal Credit Union and president of its board of directors.

Some of the poems in "Falling Leaves" have been presented to friends and family by the author. A few have been previously published in newspapers. However, this collection, which Mrs. Williams encouraged her husband to have printed, is his first book, which was printed in Heppner by the Gazette-Times.

Everyone is invited to visit with Clifford and Frances Williams and to enjoy some Bookworm coffee. Williams will autograph his books, which sell for $2. Only 70 will be sold, he said.

TWO PARTICIPATE IN CONFERENCE CALL MEET

Delpha Jones and Justine Weatherford participated in a telephone conference call meeting of the regional representatives and directors of the Eastern Region of the Oregon Lung Association last Wednesday.

This pre-arranged meeting was organized by Regional Director Anthony Haberlach, LaGrande. Most of the 20 involved answered the roll call by Everett C. Abbott, LaGrande, the board chairman. Mrs. Jones participated from the Pendleton home of her sister, where she was recuperating from her second cancer operation.

The board members heard the directors report and his announcement of the new Oregon Lung Association executive, Max Mohlbath. The group agreed to hold its annual meeting at LaGrande on Feb. 10. The telephone conference meeting lasted over half an hour.

BOOK BARGAINS AT LIBRARY

Heppner's Public Library now has a variety of duplicate books for sale, those not needed on the shelves.

Duplicate copies of National Geographic Magazines are obtainable at 15 cents. Some books such as paperbacks, Reader's Digest Condensed Books and books by less popular authors are also selling for 15 cents. A collection of rarer and more popular books is being sold at 25 cents each.

The money from the book sale is being kept separate from other library income, such as fine money and special contributions, and it will be used to help the library.

Bible study group formed

Rev. Edwin Cutting of the United Methodist Church has lead a Bible study group each winter in Heppner. Since he has been minister at both the Echo and Heppner churches he conducts classes in each community.

This year's study began last night at the church and will continue each Wednesday evening at 7:30 o'clock until Easter week. At the initial meeting text books were purchased. This year's text is "Rather Die Than Live," a 1974 work by William M. Pickard. It is based on the Book of Job.

Any person interested in joining in this study is invited to come to next Wednesday's gathering at the home of Barbara James on Baltimore street at 7:30 o'clock. Additional books will be available. Each Wednesday evening the class will meet in a different home.

CORRECTION

Mayor Jerry Sweeney was misquoted in last week's paper regarding the City of Heppner's increase in water rates.

The annual revenue from the sale of water amounts to $40,000 per year and if the rates are increased a dollar per month the added revenue would amount to $7,200 per year.

We stated that an increase of $1 per month would amount to $12,000 per year. We regret the error.

MR. AND MRS. MIKE SALING recently celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary. An open house was held at the Saling residence. Besides friends, present were the Saling's children: Fr. and Mrs. Renne Harris, Portland; Mr. and Mrs. Donald Hevener, McMinnville; Patti and Michele Saling, Heppner.

'Gift' reviewed for the Bookworms

The meeting of the Bookworms was held at Ella Smith's apartment. Fay Ferguson presented the evening's book review on "The Gift of Little Things," by Alice Ann Hutchins, a sister of Oregon's author and agricultural expert, F. R. Jackman. This autobiographical book chronicles the author's life from early years, through her growing and student years, her marriage and many years as a school teacher.

Mrs. Hutchins began teaching in country schools in Montana for $60 per month. She moved to various schools and was pleased that her salary advanced $5 each time she moved. She had amusing experiences during the years she lived in the homes of school patrons in various districts. She looked back to the years when parents read to their children during the evenings and did not just "sleep before TV's." The Hutchins' last home together was at Bandon, Ore.

The group made plans to host an autograph party honoring Clifford and Frances Williams on Saturday, Jan. 25, at the Heppner Library.
