

Host families needed for exchange students

Five International Farm Youth Exchanges and two Professional Rural Youth Leaders (4-H staff from foreign countries) will be coming to Oregon during May, June and July.

IFYE's are from the United Kingdom, Switzerland, Turkey, and India and Pakistan. The two Extension youth workers are from Botswana and Swaziland, Africa, and will arrive May 19.

Host families are needed for both the international programs. Have you considered what an international visitor in your home could do for your family and community? Morrow County residents have always been quick to welcome the young people who come on the two exchange programs!

It is not necessary to live on a farm in Morrow County to apply to host an IFYE—they are here on a cultural exchange, to learn about families and how we live—about all that is required to be a host family is a willingness to share your family with a guest, and accommodations such as you would afford any young person in your home!

PRYLE's are here to learn about the Oregon 4-H program and would spend much of their time with 4-H staff in the county, and would not spend as much time with their host family.

Interested families should respond quickly. Simple application forms are available by calling Birdine Tullis, Extension Service, Heppner, 676-9642, or writing P.O. Box 397, Heppner, Or., 97836.

Reward offered for Doug fir

There's a $100 reward out for information leading to the discovery of the national champion Douglas fir tree somewhere in Oregon. And the Oregon State Department of Forestry is organizing The Big Tree Hunt in an effort to capture this and other national champions believed to be lurking somewhere in Oregon forests.

Why would Keep Oregon Green Assn. offer a $100 reward for a Douglas fir? And why would the Department of Forestry organize The Big Tree Hunt? Shame, Oregon, known world-wide for its Douglas fir forests doesn't even hold title to the national champion Doug fir. Oregon, with over half its land in forests is running a slow fifth among other states in the number of champion-sized trees within its boundaries.

But that condition will not continue. Oregon has 75 native tree species. Oregon holds title to only 39 national champions as listed in the American Forestry Association's Social Register of Big Trees. Thirty-six more champs will restore Oregon to its proper position in the big tree world.

The Department of Forestry is asking all hikers, bird watchers, boaters, skiers and golfers to keep an eye peeled for the champ that could get them and Oregon into the Social Register. Information regarding present champs' measurements and how to measure a tree for competition may be obtained in a brochure entitled: "The Big Tree Hunt", available from all State Department of Forestry offices.

The $100 reward offered by Keep Oregon Green will be given to the first person to have entered into AFA's Social Register a national champion Douglas fir on Oregon soil. The "present champ, enthroned in Washington, is 45'5" in circumference, 221' tall, with a crown spread of 61'. The Oregon find must top this measurement.

But don't bring him in dead or alive. Only healthy, living trees will make the Register.
