Wheeler lookout is one of three in operation on the Heppner District of the Umatilla National Forest. This lookout is manned by a single man while one is occupied by a young lady and a married couple are at the other. For a quiet summer with plenty of seclusion, try this type of job.

A squad of the fire fighters get last minute instructions about where to build the next helipad before leaving in the copter.

Historic places visited

Mrs. Alena Anderson, Heppner, her daughter Adelia Martin and daughter Suzanne, Portland, left June 14 for two weeks vacation on the East Coast.

They departed from Portland via DC-10 and arrived at Boston, Ma., where the trio was met by another of Mrs. Anderson's daughter, and her family, Mr. and Mrs. C.A. Porter.

They took numerous auto trips in the Boston area and visited Ogunquit Beach, Maine, where they took a boat trip on the Atlantic in a lobster boat. They then spent a day at Strawberry Banke, Portsmouth, N.H.

According to Mrs. Anderson, Strawberry Banke is an early maritime community, so named by the 1630 settlers because of the profusion of wild strawberries in the area. The homes in the area were built from 1695 to the early 19th century. The homes were threatened in the late 1950s as the ten acre area was wanted for an urban renewal development.

The efforts of the public spirited citizens working with city, state, and federal agencies, managed to save more than 30 buildings from destruction.

Houses and shops that have been restored are now open to the public. Many craft shops are of special interest, especially leather workers, blacksmiths, pottery, weaver, Windsor chair makers and a boat shop. One can watch the building of a full sized small wooden craft, using the tools and techniques of yesteryear.

The James Marden House (1700) was once a four-room house with a central chimney.

The Hutchin's House (1810), has eight rooms with a fireplace in all but two of the rooms.

The Chase House a mid-Georgian mansion bought in 1799 by Stephen Chase for $2,600 has been restored and furnished as an 1800 home.

The Aaron Conant House (1750), one of the additions houses a coffee shop.

Governor Goodwin's mansion was built in 1811 by Ichabod Goodwin who served as Governor of New Hampshire from 1859-1861, however, he lived in the mansion for 50 years. He financed the first troops from New Hampshire to serve in the Civil War.

The home of Joshua Wentworth, 1770, was barged downstream to Strawberry Banke in 1973. The interior of the home represents the best of pre-revolutionary craftsmanship.

Many of the homes open to the public have leather buckets hanging on the walls and they are said to have been used in case of fire.

Over The Tee Cup

Remember gals, Tuesday, Aug. 19 is the special ladies day at Willow Creek. A free luncheon will be served.

Judge Carmichael played a consistent game in Sunday's men's play to win low gross and KP awards. Ron Jones had the low net. In the long drive competition Ray Massey hit the long one and Doug Gunderson used his educated putter to come in with least putts.

Following regular play Charlie Rawlins took home the change for winning the sole survivor.

On Tuesday evening of last week following match play a round of sole survivor was played. The entries were paired into teams and alternating hitting. The team of Dave Harrison and Neil Parks won first place honors followed by Ron Jones and Harold Kerr. Third place winners were Ray Massey and Doug Gunderson.

Sunday, Aug. 17 the Willow Creek Club will host men and women from McNary. On Aug. 31 the local golfers will travel to McNary for play.

Pairings have been made for the club championship play. Check the bulletin board in the clubhouse for your pairing. First round play is now underway and must be completed by Friday, Aug. 22.
