

FROM THE CORNER

By ERNIE CERESA

Heard this one on the tube the other day, should be good for a chuckle. In the mid-west a foursome was on the golf course when they approached a small waterway. The water comes from a small river and runs through part of the golf course. As they approached the water one of the golfers noticed a salmon in the shallow water. With the help of his friends they managed to keep the salmon swimming in a straight line while one of the golfers took after the salmon. He managed to hit the salmon a few strokes with his trusty iron and bring the fish to the fairway. They continued their round of golf and were preparing to depart for home with the 25-pound fish when they were approached by a member of the fish and game commission. While it seems that it is OK to take salmon with a spear and other fishing gear, no provision is made for taking salmon with a golf club. The golfers who took the salmon with his iron now face a $100 fine and 90 days in the county slammer for taking the salmon illegally. He should have stayed in the fairway.

In 1850 Walt Whitman wrote, "The Americans are going to be the most fluent and melodious-voiced people in the world, and the most perfect users of words."

Today many believe the American language has lost not only its melody but a lot of its meaning. Leon Botstein, president of New York's Bard College says, "The English language is dying because it is not taught."

Michael Shugrue, dean of the college at Richmond College of the City University of New York, says that the role of the college English teachers has shifted from introducing students to great literature to introducing "growing numbers of students to literacy to reading and writing and even speaking."

Some examples found across the nation:
Last year the Association of American Publishers' guide to reading textbooks, a guide intended for college freshmen, had to be re-written for a ninth grade reading level.

The City University of New York spent $15 million last year on remedial English courses. Many of the students enrolled under an open-admissions policy are reading below the ninth grade level.

In 1957 the average verbal score on the National Scholastic aptitude Tests was 473 (on a scale from 200-800). In 1973, the average was down 33 points to 440.

More than one-third of the students who want to become journalism majors in their junior year at the University of Wisconsin did not meet the minimum admissions standards in grammar, spelling, punctuation and word usage. At the University of North Carolina's journalism school, 39 per cent of the students flunked the basic spelling test.

Some argue that the decline in English standards results from open-admissions programs and the increase of mass education. In any case, teachers all along the line must play a frantic game of catch up.

Colleges blame high school teachers for sending them students who cannot read or write properly; high school teachers blame the schools below; with reason, nearly everyone blames the families from which the children come.

In many cases American school teachers are overworked and overwhelmed. They are lucky if they can give 10 minutes to correcting a student's paper. Some teachers diagram sentences in the hope that the structure of language will sink in and provide a foundation. Others forget about structure and trust that literature will provide a better grasp of the language. In any event the student is the one who suffers.

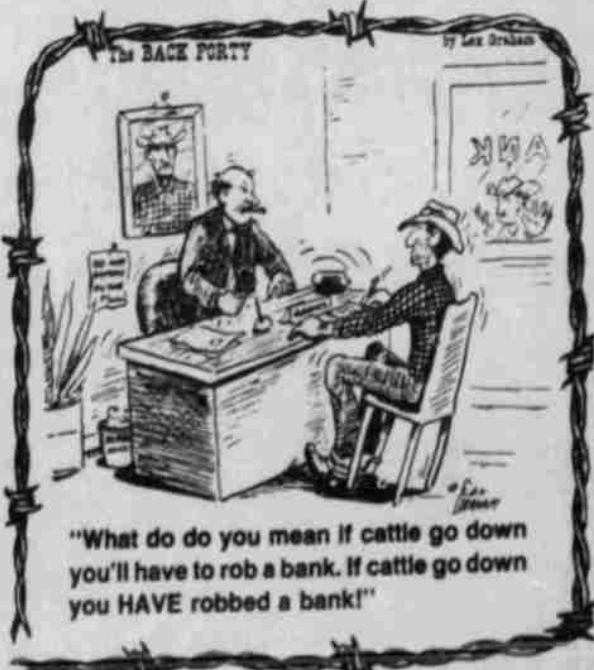

Week after week the Gazette-Times tries to bring its subscribers all of the local news, as well as items of interest within the county. Yet, after each newspaper hits the stands or is delivered to the home, the telephone at the office will start ringing and the same question will be asked, "Why didn't this news item appear in your paper?" When the caller is asked questions pertaining to the news item they will readily admit they never contacted the newspaper, however, they did tell their friends and also admit that everyone knows about the item. Everyone except the newspaper.

Last Friday the Office Tavern in Ione burned to the ground. The fire started between 2:45-3 a.m. The newspaper was notified of the fire at 5:30 p.m. Friday. When I asked the person about the fire they remarked, "Everyone knew about the fire." A gain, everyone except the newspaper.

The same holds true regarding news from the Boardman area. For the past two years the Gazette-Times has been trying to hire someone in that area as a correspondent, but to no avail. We have advertised for a correspondent and followed up every lead only to be refused time after time, however, we are still trying.

We also have many "day-laters." These are the people who contact this office Wednesday afternoon and ask that a news story be placed in the newspaper. The newspaper is taken to Pendleton to be printed Wednesday morning between 9:30-10 a.m., and is back in Heppner by 3 p.m., usually. This has been the procedure for this newspaper for the past two years.

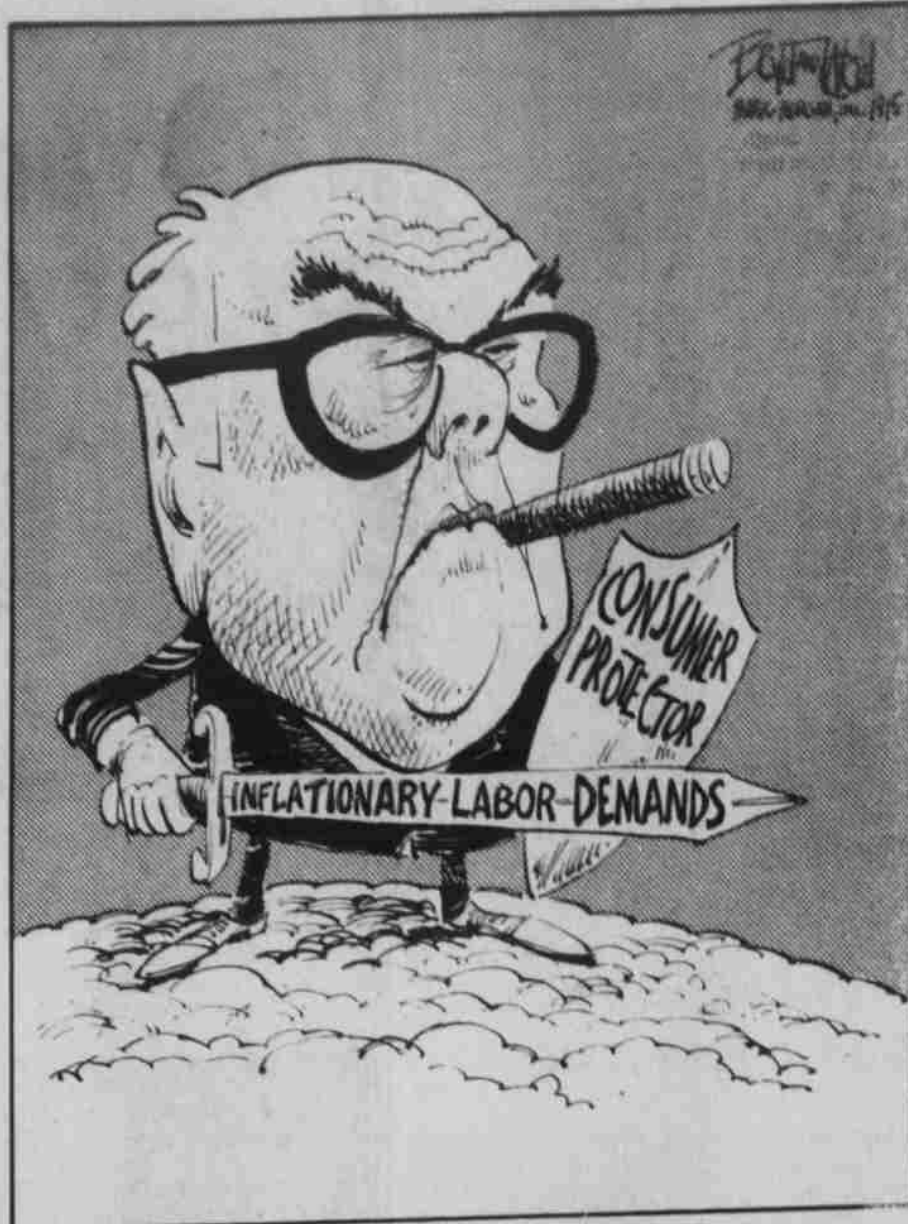

While no attempt is being made to criticize the people of the community, we wish to relate our feelings and give the people an understanding of the workings of the newspaper. If you feel it can be improved, don't tell your friends, tell us.

DEPT. VII FLOWER SHOW

The Flower Show and the other exhibits in the main pavilion building were enhanced greatly this year by the room decorations done by Tana Bunch, Barbara James, Jane Rawlins and Kay Walsingham. They arranged a last-century parlor setting on the stage area at the west end of the large room and scattered old weathered boards with western flowers around the room.

Superintendents for the Flower Show were: Delpha Jones, Norma Rea, Jane Rawlins, Barbara James, Maureen Davis, Carolyn Howard, Hazel Hamlin and Hilda Yocom.

The big winners included: Best of Show, Grand Sweepstakes, a blooming plant by Mayko Buchanan, Boardman; Best Cut Flower, Sweepstakes, a green glad from Dr. W.W. Wolff, Heppner, who also won a sweepstake ribbon for the most blue ribbons. The best flower arrangement brought a sweepstake award to Helen Martin, Ione.

Mayor of Hardman

DEAR MISTER EDITOR:

Zeke Grubb was the first one at the country store Saturday night, and he was quick to tell how come. Things was running a little off key around the house on account his next door neighbor's girl was gitting married and his old lady had took it on herself to help with the partying and arranging. Zeke said everthing he touched or tasted or set down on at home got a result like he had caught the cat's tail in a door, so he got the idee the less they was of him around the house the better.

Practical speaking, allowed Zeke, nothing invented by God or man can test a woman's organizing ability and a man's patience like a wedding. Actual, he went on, it ain't the wedding, it's the gitting ready fer it. He said his few experiences with weddings was that they are beautiful and full of strong meaning. The gitting ready he has been through has convinced him that menfolk in a wedding has about the same rank as the guest of honor at a hanging. He is a necessary part of the goings on, allowed Zeke, and that's the only reason the wimmen put up with him at all.

Fer once, the fellers was full agreed on somepun. Ed Doolittle said his daughter that works in the city is allus writing home this time of year and reporting to her Ma on this and that garden party or whatever fer her friends that are gitting married. Ed said if it weren't fer depriving his old lady of their girl's doings, he'd jest as soon she stick to reading and complaining about the shortage of canning jar seals. Them two wimmen might work up a wedding to clost to home, was Ed's words.

Clem Webster had some figgers on marriage. He said 50 per cent of the people gitting married today was wimmen, and full half of them gitting divorced was wimmen. Natural, all the fellers was agreed that wimmen are to fault fer the two out of four couples that git married gitting divorced. The big trouble is, declared Clem, that wimmen picked out a husband like she's picking out a house. She don't see it the way it is, but the way it'll be when she gits done remodeling. Clem said any woman that marries a man with the idee of making him over in her own image is going to be as disappointed as a woman that gits married because she's tired of working.

General speaking, Mister Editor, the fellers that was explaining the mysteries of marriage won't set a clock at home without asking their old ladies the time. I recall the tale—you can call it a parable—of the feller that went from house to house with two horses and a flock of chickens. He would give a chicken to the woman if she was boss of the house, and a horse to the man if he was. He ask this man which horse he wanted, the grey or the black. The man's old lady pulled him aside for a few words and the man came back and said he would take the grey. "I'm sorry," said the feller, "but you'll have a chicken."

Yours truly,
MAYOR ROY
