Hells Canyon recreation area

The House Interior Committee Thursday gave overwhelming approval to Congressman Al Ullman's legislation establishing a 660,000-acre national recreation area in Hells Canyon.

By vote of 32-4, the committee approved the measure which includes a ban on the construction of additional dams in the Middle Snake River.

Last week the committee completed its deliberation over the bill, rejecting two major amendments but stopping short of a final vote which was postponed until today.

Ullman said after the vote that he expected it would be two to three weeks, at the earliest, before the bill could come up for a vote on the house floor.

Similar legislation, backed by both Sens. Mark Hatfield and Bob Packwood has already cleared the Senate.

Last year delaying tactics by opponents of the legislation kept Ullman's bill bottled up in committee until the end of the Congress.

Setting a 66-mile segment of the Snake and the walls of Hells Canyon itself aside as wilderness, the bill essentially leaves most of the area under present multiple-purpose management.

Ullman pointed out there would be little effect on timber management because the canyon itself has never been figured in as part of the annual allowable cut since much of it is considered too difficult to log.

"Debate about Hells Canyon and the Snake River has been raging since before I came to Congress 19 years ago," Ullman said. "I am delighted we are now reaching the end of a three-year legislative effort to resolve that debate."

CRITICAL AREA PROJECT AGREEMENT SIGNED

A critical area treatment project in the form of diversion ditches and debris basins will soon get underway in the Heppner watershed area, according to Claude Buschke, president of the Heppner Water Control District.

The project is a cooperative effort between the Heppner WCD, Morrow Soil and Water Conservation District, Columbia Blue Mountain Resource Conservation and Development Project and the Soil Conservation Service.

The first phase of a five-phase project was signed last week by Claude Buschke and Gene Pierce in an effort to provide for sediment reduction and land stabilization within the Heppner area. Phase I will cover 36 square miles and includes 16 landowners.

Construction is scheduled later this fall with approximately 61 miles of diversion ditches and 89 debris basins to be built. Total treatment will eventually include 106 square miles.

Bids for the construction of this project are to be opened within the near future.
