Dallas Ward retires

"I have always felt that Heppner is my second home, although I have been away from the area for many years," said Dallas Ward, assistant athletic director and former football coach at the University of Colorado. Ward retired July 1, after 48 years of coaching and teaching.

Prior to his retirement, Ward was enshrined in the Colorado Hall of Fame, Feb. 10 at the 11th Annual Hall of Fame Banquet, Denver, CO.

Dallas Ward was born at Dry Fork, Aug. 11, 1906, the son of Bert and Ola Ward. At that time Dry Fork consisted of a dance hall, a post office and a general store. Ward was born on a ranch homesteaded by his grandfather, a Civil War veteran, who moved onto the property in 1884. Bert Ward, his father, was two years of age, when the older Ward homesteaded the property.

Bert Ward, 93, is presently living in Montana. "My dad was a fine teamster," said Dallas, "and one of the first men to haul wheat into Heppner. On one occasion he had three wagons and 10 horses driven with a jerk line and he turned the three wagons around in the middle of Main Street."

Dallas attended school at Eightmile and in 1913 he moved to Lexington where he completed his grade and high school education, in 10 years. He said, "I took two grades at a time."

A natural athlete, he played on the high school team while in the seventh grade, competing in baseball and basketball in addition to football.

At the age of 17 he entered Oregon State University, where he played football, basketball and baseball. He started every game for the Beavers during his three years on the varsity, which was climaxed when he was named to the All-Pacific conference team in his senior year. Ward had the opportunity to participate in the Rose Bowl game while a junior but declined the invitation. "During the early years of the Rose Bowl, anyone who participated in the Rose Bowl games was classified a professional player and I wanted to retain my collegiate status," said Ward.

Ward won many honors during his college career, and received offers to play professional ball. "I was offered $100 per game to play with the Philadelphia Yellow Jackets, and I turned it down, to go into coaching," said Ward.

His first paid coaching job was as an assistant football coach at Marshall High School, Minneapolis, MN. He later coached at the University of Minnesota. In six years the football teams won four national championships and five Big Ten Championships.

In 1942 he entered the U.S. Navy and was assigned to their physical fitness program as a lieutenant. He was separated from the Navy in 1945 and returned to Minnesota as a backfield coach.

He went to Boulder, CO in 1948 and began his coaching career at the University of Colorado. One of his fondest memories is his teams defeat of Clemson by a 21-20 score in the Orange Bowl in 1957. Following his controversial dismissal in 1958 he stayed on as an assistant athletic director, although he received many offers from other colleges.

Prior to his retirement in July, banquets were held in his honor. At one of these banquets, 125 football players whom he had coached during his 11 seasons presented Ward a gold Cadillac. One of his boys who was unable to attend was former astronaut John Swigert, who sent Ward a replica of the medallion he wore when he made his walk on the moon.

When asked to compare today's athletes with those of his era Ward said, "today's athletes are bigger, faster and tougher, but most of them are not big league players." Ward is quick to agree that most sports have expanded too far and have too many leagues. Speaking of professional football, Ward said, "I was offered $100 per game and I thought that was big money. Today some of the top professionals are receiving $32,000 per game. If this continues they are going to price themselves right out of a job. Today there are many people who cannot afford to take their families to a big game because of the costs involved."

Regarding college sports, Ward remarked, "All colleges offer benefits to their players, however, how can small colleges such as Oregon State or the University of Oregon compete with a large college as the University of Southern California?" A larger college offers more benefits and this attracts the players. Although Ward contends that this similar situation has prevailed for many years he remarked, "today it is on a larger scale, and it appears as though it will continue to grow."

Motorists and studded tires

It's that time of year when most motorists start to think about getting their cars ready to go through snow. Most states that have snow require cars to have either chains or snow tires. But a lot of people are now getting studded tires instead of regular snow tires.

To tell you about studded tires, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration of the Department of Transportation has published a fact sheet called, "Studded Tires, What Every Motorist Should Know." Single copies are available free from Consumer Information, Dept. 60, Pueblo, CO 81009.

Studded tires are made so tough tungsten carbide studs can be inserted. They give good traction under certain ice conditions, but aren't noticeably better than snow tires in snow or slush.

Studded tires are outlawed in some states because there is some evidence that they cause rapid road wear, particularly on curves and at stops.

If you are thinking about buying studded tires, here are some do's and don'ts for you:

DO make sure studded tires are legal in your state and in other regions where you will be driving.

DO have studs inserted by an experienced serviceman into new tires designed for use as studded tires.

DON'T have studs inserted in worn or used tires, and never try to re-stud any tire.

DON'T go beyond the recommended range of 100 to 150 studs per tire. More than 150 studs per tire can reduce traction.

DO be sure to take the studded tires off at season's end. And avoid driving at high speeds or on dry pavement for long periods of time. This can lead to rapid wear.
