

Action agency offers assistance

Community action can heat your home. That's what the Heppner Neighborhood Center advocates and they have the plans and operations to prove it.

The Neighborhood Center says that if a person is low-income and elderly, low income and handicapped or just low income, they can help.

The community action agency has a plan to keep these people warm this winter. With the conservation of energy in mind, the agency offers services to homes.

Among these services are the installation of skirting, insulating attics, floors and walls; repair of broken windows; patching roofs and walls; caulking cracks and joints; weatherstripping doors and windows; installing plastic storm windows; bank foundations or wrapping pipes.

The services are all energy saving techniques that require simple effort and desire which the agency is offering.

Whether a person rents or whether he buys, if he is a low income person, he is urged to contact the Heppner office at the Neighborhood Center. Pat Brindle is the contact at 676-5873 or on 120 South Main Street in Heppner.

Garden Club

The garden clubs of Morrow County have been working on gathering pictures and facts about historic trees. The Ione Garden Club won many honors with the pictures and articles that they submitted to a book of historic trees that was a Bicentennial project of the Eastern Oregon area of Garden Clubs.

The Heppner Garden Club is eager to learn about historic trees south of Lexington. Mrs. Norman Nelson is planning to put together a book about all the historic trees of the county. She will use the material that the Ione Club has already published and the pictures and articles that the Heppner Club hopes to gather.

If you have information about historic trees, or can furnish a picture of old trees, or help the club get a picture and story about old trees, please contact Irene Nolan, in charge of this project for the Heppner Garden Club.
