Nuclear plant explored

With one eye open and a quick look around the house for anything I might forget, I grabbed my sack lunch, arriving at the Fairgrounds at 5:30 a.m. to board the bus.

The Morrow County Extension Tour Service with Harold Kerr and Birdine Tullis as tour directors, was headed for the Trojan Nuclear Plant with about 40 people aboard.

We were met by Buz Clough at the Visitors' Center, who was our personal guide through the plant. The Visitors' Center is open to the public every day.

Our tour began with an explanation of how a nuclear plant works. We were then taken to the Exposition Center to view different aspects of nuclear energy with a film and exhibits.

After lunch, we were asked to leave all cameras and sharp objects at the security desk. We were taken to the entrance, where again we were met by more security people who requested we turn in all jewelry and silver coins. We were led through a metal detector similar to the airport's security.

After our jewelry and money was returned to us, we boarded an electric bus with a very personable guide who explained the steam generators, nuclear fuel, the high pressure turbines, and cooling systems. We also viewed the computer room that runs the plant.

A nuclear power plant is nothing more than a steam-electric generating station in which a nuclear reactor takes the place of a furnace and the heat comes from the fissioning of uranium fuel rather than from the burning of fossil fuel. It is the waste of the spent fuel that makes the nuclear plants unpopular in Oregon, even though uranium in the fuel (U-235) is so low that a bomb-like nuclear explosion is impossible.

We were then taken back to Portland to pick the restaurant of our choice for dinner, arriving home at 11:30 p.m. Our humorous and great bus driver was Bill Flatt

Eye aids

Your collection of no longer needed eye glasses may very well become part of clearing up the sight of a foreign nation. The Heppner Lions Club has taken on a project of collecting old eye glasses needed in Africa.

Dick Sargent, project chairman, asks that anyone wishing to donate glasses may leave them at the Coast-to-Coast store, Heppner. The main purpose of this project is to help other clubs in an effort to provide 100,000 pairs being sought for needy African people.

Legal advice

A Legal Aid program is being offered every Monday night in Pendleton.

This program, slated for 7 to 9 p.m., is held each Monday evening for people who have difficulty coming in the daytime. The service is made possible by the Community Schools.

Legal Aid offers legal advice and representation in non-criminal matters at no charge to low income residents of Morrow and Umatilla Counties.

The program is held at Helen McCune Junior High School on S.W. Dorion in Pendleton.

Ione teen representative

Viewpoints and changes will be discussed and decided during the November 11 and 12 meeting of the 4-H Advisory Council. This year's meeting, being held in Corvallis, will welcome newcomer teen representative, Jan Peterson, Ione. Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herb Peterson, Jan is a junior at Ione High School.

Though her involvement as a 4-H member has grown extensively, she also gives her energies to many school activities and responsibilities. Not to leave too much spare time left over, Jan also involves herself with community and church projects.

Traveling with Jan will be district representative on the council, Mrs. Vern Evans, Irrigon. Mrs. Evans represents leaders in Gilliam, Morrow, Grant, Wheeler and Umatilla counties, on the council advisory group.

Birdine Tullis, Morrow Extension Program Assistant, approvingly states, "We feel well represented on the state committee and hope that having two local representatives will help all leaders and members see they are part of a really big youth program. The grass roots involvement recommendations and representation is of great importance."

Concerns of this year's meeting include: recommendations from all Project Development committees, reports and recommendations concerning international programs, State Fair and PILE. Leaders Forums, Oregon 4-H Foundation and review of 4-H membership criteria, as well as other business presented by committee members. Congratulations, Jan.
